Begin's urging to 'open hearts' reaps dividends

TORONTO —

Prime Minister Begin last week called on the Jews of Toronto to open their hearts to the 300,000 underprivileged of the slum areas of Israel because "when Jews open their hearts, their pockets open automatically."

He was right.

His three-day visit to Toronto generated close to $10 million in pledges for the 1979 United Jewish Appeal campaign and for Project Renewal, the massive slum rehabilitation program in Israel in which Toronto Jews are participating along with Jews throughout the free world.

The Israeli prime minister attended two UJA functions here: a fund-raising dinner, attended by 400, at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, organized by the major gifts division; and a community rally at Beth Tzedec Congretation, attended by 5,000.

When Begin urged support for Project Renewal at the dinner meeting, Allan Offman, major gifts chairman, told him that "tonight you see the heart and soul of our community. We won't let you down. . . . We'll set the example for the world."

UJA chairman Jerry Halbert told the meeting that Toronto's goal for Project Renewal is $10 million over a five-year period. This is in addition to the regular 1979 UJA campaign for local and other Israel needs. Funds raised for Project Renewal will aid in the rehabilitation of Kiryat Hayovel and Kiryat Menachem, two slum areas in Jerusalem.

Prime Minister Begin asked world Jewry to raise a total of $600 million for the project and he said this amount will be matched by the government of Israel. He described the campaign as a war on poverty "which must be waged and won. This program could liquidate the slums and put an end to the intolerable injustice suffered by so many Jewish people."

The fund-raising dinner at Shaarei Shomayim on Saturday night was to have been closed to the media but Begin asked them to attend to hear his views on the negotiations. It was his first contact with the media since a meeting held a day earlier in Toronto with Moshe Dayan and Ezer Weizman, who are conducting the negotiations in Washington on behalf of Israel.

At Beth Tzedec Congregation, Sunday morning, the thousands of UJA canvassers and contributors started lining up outside by 8:30 for the 11 a.m. meeting. About 2,500 of the 5,000 ticket holders were seated in the sanctuary. The others watched the proceedings on closed circuit television in the banquet hall, the mezzanine and two chapels. The entire meeting was broadcast live on a network of cable TV stations throughout Metro Toronto.

At the Shaarei Shomayim, Prime Minister Begin was greeted with rousing Israeli songs by the synagogue's choir and Cantor Harold Klein, who also led the audience in Hatikvah and O Canada. Cantor Joseph Cooper led the anthems at Beth Tzedec. Rabbi Henry Hoschander gave the invocation at the Shaarei Shomayim event and Rabbi Benjamin Friedberg led a prayer for peace at the Beth Tzedec rally.

Thousands spellbound

Emotion runs high as Begin delivers memorable speech

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

TORONTO —

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin climaxed his official six-day visit to Canada by delivering a passionate address to a packed house of 5,000 persons at Beth Tzedec Congregation.

Amid the tightest security ever mounted for a visiting dignitary in Toronto, Begin declared that Israel would negotiate with Egypt until a peace treaty is signed, and appealed to the Soviet Union to permit Jewish emigration.

To periodic, sustained applause reverberating throughout the cavernous sanctuary, the frail 65-year-old Israeli leader spoke with passion and deep emotion as he defended Israel's negotiating stance and reaffirmed his government's refusal to withdraw to the pre-1967 armistice lines or to acquiesce to the creation of a PLO-controlled state in Judea and Samaria.

Two hours prior to the start of the meeting, long, serpentine lines had formed around Beth Tzedec as people braved cold winds to get choice seats in the synagogue. Metro policemen patrolled the area in case of trouble, and nearby streets were blocked by yellow police barricades. An ambulance, its engine idling, waited a block away. Nervous RCMP and Israeli security men mingled with the crowd.

Hours before he flew to New York City to confer with U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance on the latest snag in Israeli-Egyptian talks, Begin read a cabinet communique deploring Egypt's new demand for a tighter link between a separate agreement and a comprehensive Arab-Israeli settlement.

Waving a document in the air, he asserted that Cairo's latest diplomatic twist was inconsistent with the Camp David agreements and unacceptable to the Israeli government.

Begin said the introduction of these demands "makes negotiation increasingly difficult and creates serious obstacles."

However, the former Irgun leader said Israel would continue to negotiate with an open heart and in good faith, and he expressed optimism that an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty would be signed eventually.

He reiterated that Israel does not seek a separate agreement with Egypt at the expense of the Palestinians and the other Arab states. "We have never asked, nor shall we ever ask for a separate peace treaty with Egypt. First we shall conclude a treaty with Egypt and then we shall invite the others. The first part is absolute, non-conditional. First we have to conclude our peace treaty, then there will be others."

Begin recalled how he had informed Anwar Sadat, on the eve of his visit to Jerusalem, that a full Israeli withdrawal from the occupied territories and the establishment of a Palestinian state were conditions the government found "totally unacceptable."

He said the West Bank-Gaza Strip Palestinians could determine their future through full autonomy, but not through a state that would lead to incessant bloodshed and turmoil.

His body swaying slightly, Begin called on the Soviets to allow Jews to immigrate to Israel. "Why do you persecute our people again only because they want to go to the land of their forefathers?"

He paused for a second, drama in the air. "Let my people go!" he roared, his voice breaking, as thousands of hands applauded vigorously and as cameras flashed.

In any case, Begin then voiced regret that "there are some" nations who do not recognize Jerusalem as Israel's capital. "With respect, I say we do not recognize their non-recognition." He said it was odd that Jerusalem, which has served as a capital for some 3,000 years, has still to gain complete international recognition.

He said Jerusalem "reunited and indivisible will remain the capital as long as the Jewish people live. And the Jewish people will live forever."

Almost plaintively, Begin reminded the crowd that Israel is a key element in the Western defence system. "We're a faithful ally of the free world and the free world should be a faithful ally of Israel."

After the completion of his 48-minute address, MPP David Rotenberg presented him with a painting of an Ontario rural scene, a gift from the Ontario government. He also accepted a book on Eskimo sculpture from the United Jewish Appeal.

'Struck deep chord'

Rabbi W. Gunther Plaut, whose eloquent introduction of Begin set the mood of the meeting, later told The Canadian Jewish News: "The average Jew in Toronto responds to what he senses to be the deep Jewish commitment of Israel's prime minister. This Jewish response was perhaps more intense in his case than with other prime ministers from Israel who have visited here, but of course, they came in far different circumstances. They received a cordial, enthusiastic welcome, but there was a special intensity in Mr. Begin. His Jewishness struck a deep chord in our community."

Seek abolition of limitation

BONN [JTA] —

The Society for Christian-Jewish Cooperation has petitioned the West German parliament to rescind the statute of limitations on the prosecution of Nazi war criminals, which goes into effect on Dec. 31, 1979. They called it a loophole through which Nazi murderers could escape justice.

The statute of limitations law originally became effective 20 years after the commission of a crime. It was extended to 30 years at the insistence of organizations of Nazi victims, who noted that many wanted war criminals have managed to evade arrest. They are now pressing for a further extension or outright abolition of the statute in war crimes cases.

Trudeau praises Israeli PM for his 'painful compromises'

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

TORONTO —

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau told a state banquet here that Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin has made "painful compromises" to achieve a lasting settlement in the Middle East.

Speaking to 1,200 persons at the Sheraton Centre Hotel, in downtown Toronto, Trudeau remarked: "You have won our deep respect for your willingness to make the painful compromises without which peace would be impossible."

Referring to Begin as a great man and a symbol of Holocaust survivors, Trudeau added: "To give up the settlements in Sinai which were built with so much work and hope by Israeli pioneers will be very hard. Nor is it easy for Egypt to proceed toward peace in the face of opposition from some other parts of the Arab world."

The Canadian prime minister praised his counterpart for agreeing to "a real and important measure of autonomy and self-government for the Palestinians, as a transitional step until their status can be finally determined at the end of the five-year interim period."

In a speech regarded by observers as unusually friendly and warm, Trudeau declared he was proud to be in the presence of a man "who has endured and survived great suffering in the service of a powerful ideal."

He described Begin as a "witness" of Jewish suffering in the last war. "You are their guarantee that they did not die unknown, unhonored, or in vain."

Trudeau said that an agreement between Israel and Egypt would represent a "crucially important step" toward a comprehensive settlement, but he warned that such an achievement was still a long way off.

He urged Jordan, Syria and "the responsible leaders of the Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza" to join Israel and Egypt in negotiating an overall peace pact. "We call upon all parties to show the courage, imagination and flexibility in the course of the negotiations that both sides have shown in the discussions between Israel and Egypt."

Trudeau called for the formation of a Middle Eastern version of the Common Market, saying the EEC "is perhaps the finest example of once hostile countries forming economic links in the aftermath of a terrible war."

He said Canada was willing to play a peace-keeping role in the area after Israel and Egypt sign a peace treaty.

In reply to Trudeau's speech, Begin asserted: "I have never heard such a moving speech of greeting as I have heard tonight. . . . I will never forget this night."

After telling the audience of how Trudeau's three sons had greeted him with "Shaloms," Begin noted, "In the first house of Canada there is a deep sense of friendship for Israel and the Jewish people." He invited the prime minister to visit him in Jerusalem, the Israeli capital which Canada does not recognize.

In other remarks, Begin expressed derision for Arab demonstrators outside the hotel who associated Zionism with racism. He also thanked President Carter for his efforts to help Israel and Egypt reach a "very decent agreement" at the Camp David summit and ventured the thought that peace was inevitable.

Some 200 Arab demonstrators, carrying placards and chanting anti-Israel slogans, waited for Begin and Trudeau to arrive. Across the street, a smaller crowd of mainly Jewish students shouted, "We want Begin," "We want peace," "Remember Maalot."

While waiting for Begin's limousine, Trudeau chatted with a handful of persons belonging to the Alliance of Non-Zionist Jews. When Begin, a small, stooped man in a severe black overcoat, stepped out of the car, they shouted, "Give the land back."

A large contingent of police and RCMP plainclothesmen was on hand. Two Arab protesters were arrested, charged with two counts of assaulting police. One of the pro-Arab demonstrators was Ken Stone, a Hamilton Jew who supports the PLO. "I'm not alone," he said. "There are a lot of Jews in this group."

Attack Carter on PLO issue

By JOSEPH POLAKOFF

WASHINGTON, [JTA] —

The Carter Administration is proceeding on a double track in its relationship to the United Nations program that attempts to glorify the Palestine Liberation Organization and vindicate its purposes.

While the administration will not take part in the program arranged by the "Special Unit of the Palestine People" set up by the UN General Assembly, neither will it withhold U.S. payment of more than a third of the program's cost although Congress has advised President Carter not to pay it.

Questions posed by the Jewish Telegraphic Agency at the White House and the State Department have drawn responses that indicate some highly placed administration officials continue keen on hinting to the PLO chiefs that the American door is not locked to them, and, despite the public statements in recent weeks by the president himself and the State Department, the way will be found to include the terrorists in the Mideast political process based on the Camp David accords.

In a statement that contradicts its own prior official positions, the State Department declared on Oct. 12 that "we have a legal obligation to pay our assessed contribution" to the program. The UN, it said, is "prohibited from accepting earmarked funds because of the financial chaos this would cause" and, besides, the U.S. has "long opposed the Soviets for wanting" to restrict use of funds.

The State Department, following its statement, quietly made known that Andrew Young, the U.S. Ambassador to the UN, has informed Secretary General Kurt Waldheim that the U.S. will not take part in the program for the Palestinians. Neither the White House nor the State Department has taken a strong public stand against the program which is deliberately scheduled to reach its zenith Nov. 29, the 31st anniversary of the UN vote to partition Palestine.

"The International Day of Solidarity With the Palestinian People," as the General Assembly has described it, will be featured by the premier of a film, "Palestinians do Have Rights," which is understood to show PLO chief Yasir Arafat vowing "moderate objectives" despite his continued attacks on Israel and his threats against Carter and the United States as a whole. His latest remark is to vow he will fight the Camp David accords "with all our potentials."

The Senate, on June 28, without a single objection, adopted an amendment to the Foreign Relations Authorization Act to reduce the U.S. contribution to the UN by the U.S. proportionate share of the budget of the "Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People."

Why was Levesque absent?

By JANICE ARNOLD

MONTREAL —

Premier Rene Levesque's personal absence from the visit of Menachem Begin to Montreal leaves several questions unanswered, most notably:

—Did External Affairs goof in its handling of protocol?

—Does Levesque place more importance on his quarrels with Ottawa than on courtesy toward a visiting head of state?

—Was his absence a reflection of his feeling toward Israel and/or the Jewish community?

In a letter dated Nov. 3 to Ambassador Mordechai Shalev, Quebec's Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, Claude Morin, stated that Vice-Premier Jacques-Yvan Morin "would have been happy" to be the official host of Begin while in Montreal Nov. 8. However, Morin goes on to say in a delicate way, the Federal authorities did not wish to have a provincial politician playing host.

A copy of this letter was sent to the leaders of the major Jewish organizations and some Quebec dailies.

Meanwhile, External Affairs issued an itinerary of Begin's visit to Canada. An earlier one listed Jacques-Yvan Morin as being in the receiving line when Begin landed at Dorval Airport. The itinerary was later revised and, on the actual day of the visit, Claude Morin was listed instead.

The External Affairs press officer attached to the Montreal visit confessed right up to within an hour of Begin's scheduled arrival that he did not know who would be at the airport besides Ambassador Shalev.

As it turned out, a "mere civil servant," in the words of Quebec Liberal Leader Claude Ryan who immediately seized upon Levesque's absence, was at the airport.

Yves Michaud, special advisor on foreign affairs, and his wife joined the Shalevs to receive Begin and Federal-Provincial Affairs Minister Marc Lalonde and their wives.

Claude Morin later said he had never been invited to the airport. Also missing from the receiving line was Mayor Jean Drapeau, who was expected by External Affairs. Drapeau was reported to have said he would meet Begin "in my city"—Montreal, not Dorval.

A group of Combined Jewish Appeal leaders and Mayor Drapeau were however, on hand to greet the Israeli prime minister at the hotel.

Whatever slight Quebec felt from the federal authorities it apparently was not felt by Premier William Davis of Ontario who met Begin at Toronto Airport or by Premier Richard Hatfield of New Brunswick who was among the 400 invited guests at the luncheon at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, hosted by Lalonde.

An obviously uncomfortable Michaud, when asked during the few minutes the press was allowed to be present at the luncheon why Levesque did not attend, snapped "Why don't you ask him?"

It appears now that External Affairs and Levesque's aides would prefer the matter be left to rest. Phone calls by The Canadian Jewish News to both sources after Begin had gone on to Toronto received no reply.

Levesque's absence was the second in six months from a major function related to Israel. The premier did not show up at the May 10 celebration of Israel's 30th anniversary held at the Forum in Montreal. In his place were MNA Gerald Godin and Michaud. At the time, aides to Levesque squelched rumors published in a Montreal French-language daily that Levesque had been insulted by the manner in which he was invited.

Then, as with the Begin visit, the official explanation from Levesque's office for his absence was a scheduled cabinet meeting.

Those in close contact with Quebec government officials believe Levesque has no desire to be anything but a friend of Israel. This is held true in the Nov. 3 letter to Shalev in which Morin asks the ambassador to communicate to Begin Quebec's wish to maintain and develop "deep and important" exchanges between the governments of Quebec and Israel.

"We wish to join with numerous Quebecois, notably the members of our important Jewish community . . . (in rejoicing in) the presence on our territory of the prime minister of Israel; may his visit to Montreal contribute to the reinforcement and development of the ties that exist already between Israelis and Quebecois," wrote Morin in French.

Morin also sent the best wishes of government on the peace efforts in the Middle East.

Peace in the future

NEW YORK [JTA] — Former secretary of state Henry Kissinger warned here that the Camp David agreement, in any form of interpretation, reduces Israel's influence in the West Bank because the accords include no provisions for any change of the 1967 borders. Addressing a World Jewish Congress luncheon, Kissinger said the United States and Israel must achieve a private understanding as to where the process of peace in the Middle East is heading.

Kissinger said he believes the peace treaty between Israel and Egypt will be concluded "in the near future," and he predicted it will create a new reality and bring a political and spiritual change in the Mideast. He cautioned that the Israelis should be careful in their expectation from peace with Egypt. He said a mechanism should be established between the two countries that will be compatible "with the self-respect and the image of themselves." He also said that Israelis should refrain from the romantic notion of peace and realize a peace treaty is not the end of any political conflict.

Middle East Center causes deep concern

LOS ANGELES [JTA] — The Los Angeles Chapter of the American Jewish Committee recently revealed plans of the University of Southern California (USC) to establish a Middle East Center financed by American multi-national corporations who do business with the oil-rich Arab states. The AJC charges that the Center, which has the backing of Saudi Arabia, is part of a nationwide program to politicize and control universities.

The initial funding of $7 million will come from the newly incorporated Middle East Center Foundation, using gifts contributed by the Fluor Corporation and other businesses with large dealings in Saudi Arabia. According to Neil C. Sandberg, Western Regional Director of the AJC, the USC Board of Trustees approved a contract which would have given the Center the authority to select its own faculty and set its own curriculum. In effect, the university proposed to give control of its academic programs to outsiders, with their own private agendas.

"It is our view," said Sandberg, "that the university itself has these responsibilities and that it is required to avoid the kind of politicizing that can lead to skewed program offerings. In approving the contract, we feel that the university has compromised its commitment to its objective academic role and has taken sides in an international political controversy."

Following exposure of this plan by the AJC, the Faculty Senate and President's Advisory Council at USC protested the attempt to remove the Center from their control. Subsequently, the university issued a Memorandum of Understanding which appears to supersede establishment of the Center under the original contract. "While we are pleased at this new development, we remain deeply concerned with the need to monitor the Center's program," Sandberg said. "The AJC is now working with other interested Jewish groups to see that a satisfactory final outcome is reached."

Public celebrations are set to tie in with Nobel awards

NEW YORK [JTA] — A wide-ranging series of public celebrations will be held in 100 cities throughout the U.S. and Canada on Dec. 10, in conjunction with ceremonies the same day in Oslo as Israeli Premier Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Anwar Sadat receive the Nobel Peace Prize.

Begin hailed the forthcoming events in a letter to the Israel Bond organization, declaring that the meetings "will strengthen our economy in the challenging months ahead." He said: "As I attend the ceremonies in Oslo, Norway, in recognition of our efforts to bring peace to the region, I shall take comfort in the knowledge that we have so many understanding friends who are prepared to stand with us and demonstrate their faith in our future."

The festive meetings are sponsored by the Israel Bond organization in conjunction with its rabbinic cabinet. Sam Rothberg, general chairman of the organization, and Leon Kronish, chairman of the rabbinic cabinet and spiritual leader of Temple Beth Sholom, Miami Beach, Florida, said in a joint announcement that the celebrations are co-sponsored by the three major national rabbinic bodies, Central Conference of American Rabbis (Reform); Rabbinic Assembly (Conservative) and Rabbinical Council of America (Orthodox).

Ottawa community gives Begin a real hero's welcome

By RUTH KAHANE

OTTAWA —
An exuberant Ottawa Jewish community gave Israeli prime minister Menachem Begin a hero's welcome to Canada.

Begin and his wife Aliza were greeted on the tarmac at Canadian Forces Base Uplands by Prime Minister Trudeau and other officials as their Air Canada 727 jet arrived from New York at 6:20 p.m. last Monday.

A crowd of over 2,000 people, waiting inside Hangar 11, sang and shouted their welcome as the Nobel prize-winning peacemaker made his first appearance in Canada as Israeli head of government.

As he stepped to the reviewing stand to receive full military honors the cheering surged, then turned to song as Hatikvah was played.

Begin conducted a full inspection of the honor guard to the brass and bagpipe tunes of the kilted Cameron Highlanders Band and Havenu Shalom Aleichems of the crowd, signed the guest book, and then dispensing with protocol, took a walk with Trudeau to make personal contact with the people.

Making his way around the cordoned hall for 15 minutes, Begin shook hands, chatted, touched children's heads, and kissed. At one point he stopped to join a group of about 50 children rallied under a banner which read in Hebrew "We are blessed by your arrival, Menachem Begin, Pursuer of Peace. May the Lord help you."

While security, both Israeli and Canadian, tightly surrounded the two leaders, RCMP and military police fought a losing battle to keep the excited crowd members behind the cordon. Israeli reporters especially were shocked at the lax security, but officials commented that the military base was itself a high-security area and met the requirements of the occasion.

At the end of the walk, the Begins climbed aboard a waiting limousine to be whisked along flag-lined streets to 24 Sussex Drive for a working dinner with Prime Minister Trudeau.

An official of the prime minister's office said the dinner was highlighted by the three Trudeau children greeting the Begins with "Shalom," and by the youngest Trudeau, Michel, continually repeating his new Hebrew word at every opportunity.

The dinner, also attended by Israeli ambassador Mordechai Shalev and his wife, was a kosher meal with Israeli wine.

The subjects of discussion ranged from history to Bible to a focus on the Mideast.

Officials said the two leaders discussed terrorism and hijacking, and then discussed matters relating to the Camp David agreement.

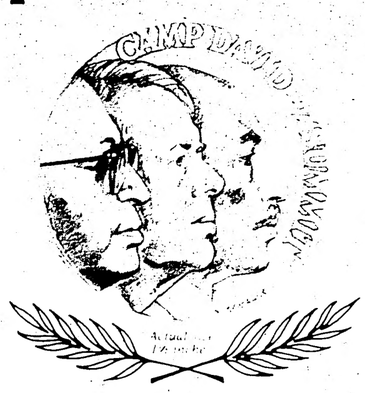
The Camp David Summit Medal



"Now is not the time to dream of peace but to live it!"
MENACHEM BEGIN

The historic Camp David summit, with all the perils still to be navigated, marks the beginning of a new era in the Middle East. In thirteen days of face to face meetings, the leaders of Israel and Egypt demonstrated courage and statesmanship in moving their countries from a state of belligerency towards one of cooperation and good neighborly relations. All of this could not have come about without the goodwill, determination and statesmanship of the President of the United States of America.

This Yom Kippur, therefore, was a day of awe at the prospect of peace, now brought nearer by the heroic efforts of three men, Menachem Begin, Anwar el Sadat and Jimmy Carter. In keeping with our goal of building a continuing numismatic record of the history of the Jewish people, the Judaic Heritage Society is commemorating the Camp David Summit meeting with a special issue medal. It is with great pleasure that we welcome the opportunity to create this new medallic work on an upbeat note. So many of our medals in recent years have commemorated the wars and sadness that have beset the young State of Israel. We feel that the New Year just begun permits us an outlook that is radically and hopefully changed for the better. May the Camp David Summit Medal herald a great new era for peace in the Middle East!

The Medal

The Camp David Summit Medal, struck in high relief, is limited to 120 medals in solid 14 karat gold, 2,500 medals in sterling silver and 5,000 in solid bronze. The medals are 1½ inches in diameter, about the size of a U.S. silver dollar, each is hallmarked; gold and silver medals are numbered on the rim. A display stand is provided at no extra cost with each medal. Prices for the Camp David Summit Medal are: in solid 14 karat gold, $500; in sterling silver, $35; in solid bronze, $14.

Trudeau and Begin confer in cordiality

By RUTH KAHANE

OTTAWA —
Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Prime Minister Trudeau met here in talks surrounded by "a very cordial atmosphere" despite apparent basic differences of opinion Canada has with Israel on specific Mideast issues.

After a 40-minute private discussion, followed by a meeting that lasted well over the allotted hour, with External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson, Defence Minister Barney Danson and top officials, the two leaders appeared to make short statements to the press.

Prime Minister Trudeau introduced Begin as "a man that has shown the way to peace" and said he had expressed his "admiration and support." Begin told the press that Mr. Trudeau had shown "deep understanding" for Israel's position.

The two leaders said they discussed issues including the state of peace treaty negotiations in Washington, and a number of bilateral issues including El Al landing rights in Toronto, Canada's policy on the Arab boycott of Israel, Canada-Israel trade, and the possible participation of Canada in a future United Nations Sinai peacekeeping force.

DUAL ALLEGIANCE: AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY
BEN DUNKELMAN

Forward by Yitzhak Rabin

In the Queen's Own Rifles Ben Dunkelman rose to the rank of major—and won the Distinguished Service Cross as his regiment battled its way from Normandy to the Rhine.

In Israel, he organized an ill-equipped army, helped clear the Tel Aviv-Jerusalem corridor, and drove the Arab troops from northern Galilee.

His was a DUAL ALLEGIANCE. He devoted his life to two nations. He saw both pain and triumph—and found a satisfaction few men ever know.

A courageous leader

For several memorable days, Menachem Begin met with Canadian Jewry and left with them a strengthened impression of a courageous, devoted man whose abiding passion is the security of the Jewish state. The prime minister of Israel has had world-wide exposure in the press, television and radio, but these media fail to convey the essential humanity of this unusual head of state. To see him in the flesh, to hear him speak with an eloquence born of lifelong convictions, as did thousands in Toronto and Montreal, is to appreciate as never before the stature of Menachem Begin.

The warmth of the greeting Begin received on this visit to Canada was not confined to the Jewish community, the Canadian government welcomed him with an unusual display of cordiality. This was in evidence in Ottawa and at the state dinner tendered by Prime Minister Trudeau in Toronto.

Begin is no stranger to Canada, but this was his first visit as prime minister of Israel. He came to this country at a time when peace negotiations with Egypt showed ominous signs of strain, so much so that two of his senior lieutenants, Moshe Dayan and Ezer Weizman, flew to Toronto to brief their leader. In two addresses that followed, at Shaarei Shomayim Congregation and Beth Tzedec Congregation, respectively, Begin voiced confidence that the pursuit of peace would be crowned with success, though he did not minimize the problems still to be solved.

Peace with Egypt will be a major step, but only a beginning of the difficult task of bringing tranquility to the Middle East. The hostility of the Arab world towards Israel — and now shared by Egypt — will not disappear with the signing of a peace treaty. The months ahead will be difficult ones and today, as never before, is the time for world Jewry to close ranks, to put sectional differences aside for the time when we can afford the luxury of fighting among ourselves.

Congratulations, Ontario

The day the Ontario Legislature passed Bill 112, the Discriminatory Business Practices Act, may well go down in Canadian history as the day when the Arab boycott received a final rebuff in this country.

By coming to promulgate anti-boycott legislation, the Ontario government not only acquitted itself well, but also provided Ottawa with an example to follow.

Bill 112, which the Canada-Israel Committee describes as "an outstanding piece of innovative legislation," outlaws discrimination in business on the basis of race, creed, color, nationality, ancestry, place of origin or geographic location. It is designed to protect all Ontarians from the restrictive trade provisions of secondary and tertiary boycotts.

Individuals convicted under the provisions of Bill 112 are liable to a fine up to $5,000, and corporations can receive a maximum penalty of $50,000 and be disqualified from getting a government contract for five years. A yearly report on boycott activities will be sent to the minister of consumer and commercial relations. Names of companies found to be complying with the boycott will be made public.

In effect, Bill 112 outlaws boycotts. The federal government announced last August it intends to introduce anti-boycott legislation as well, but that legislation would not formally ban restrictive trade practices. Ottawa's bill would require all companies and individuals, whether or not they asked for or received government support, to report boycott requests. Firms that refused to abide by the proposed legislation would be reported to Parliament and be subject to fines.

Compared to its current ineffectual anti-boycott guidelines, Ottawa's planned legislation is a definite improvement. Yet, as its own ministers would no doubt admit, even that falls short of the landmark legislation enacted by Ontario last week and by the United States earlier this year.

Oil dollar frustration

Oil prices have doubled, tripled and quadrupled in the last five years and the Arabs have been the main beneficiaries of these astonishing price increases. Wisely, they have invested their huge profits in Western Europe and North America, areas of the world where stability still reigns. Observers who have watched these developments continue to wonder what impact, if any, petrodollars will have on the economies and political systems of the nations in question. There are no clear-cut answers to this conundrum, but part of the problem has revealed itself in an American Jewish Committee study on Arab petrodollars in the United States.

It is a penetrating study and the conclusions drawn by the authors, Robert Nathan and Louis Walinsky, should cause many of us to pause for at least a moment's reflection.

According to Messrs. Nathan and Walinsky, two eminent economists, the Arabs have invested $50 billion in the U.S. to date. In their view, this astronomical investment will grow by about $12 billion by the end of 1978.

Technically, there is nothing wrong or immoral about Arab investments overseas. Yet major risks are involved when countries with heavy political axes to grind are permitted such free access to the American economy.

Messrs. Nathan and Walinsky have outlined these risks in their important paper.

If the Arabs decide to use their funds as a political weapon, they could abruptly liquidate their assets in the U.S. and transfer them abroad, completely disrupting financial markets.

American banks, which have played a major role in helping oil-importing countries finance their balance of payments deficit, may sooner or later encounter debt default or repudiation by their debtors. This, the economists warn, could plunge the banks into bankruptcy and cause a collapse of the entire international financial structure.

Another danger worth considering is that American foreign policy decision-makers may succumb to Arab and/or Saudi pressure at some point in the future. Messrs. Nathan and Walinsky cite an example that, they believe, has already occurred. Last spring, in the face of mounting pressure from various sources, both domestic and foreign, Washington sold highly sophisticated F-15 jet fighters to Saudi Arabia. The reasons for providing the Saudis with F-15 were dubious, but the sale went through. "In what international crisis will this power next be exercised, and at what injury to our national interest?" they ask.

Undoubtedly, the inflow of Arab petrodollars has had some positive repercussions. This capital has partially offset the U.S. balance of payments deficits on current account, limited the decline of the dollar in its exchange relationships with other currencies, tended to decelerate somewhat the upward course of interest rates, and, in general, stimulated the economy.

But, Messrs. Nathan and Walinsky stress, high Arab oil prices were greatly responsible for causing such fiscal ills as steep interest rates, unemployment, poor balances of trade and decline of the dollar. Thus, the very investors who contributed to the ruin of the American economy now wield some of its levers, an ironic and disquieting situation indeed.

No limitation on evil

On December 31, 1978, in conformity with West German law, the statute of limitations on Nazi war criminals will come into effect. The law in question does not deal specifically with Nazi crimes but with murder and other heinous deeds. Its consequences, however, will primarily touch the scores of thousands of SS butchers who presumably will be able to walk the streets of West Germany without fear of prosecution after the new year.

A campaign is now being mounted to persuade the government of Chancellor Schmidt to revoke the statute of limitations in question. There is a strong possibility the Bonn government might be induced to follow this suggestion if enough pressure is mounted.

It is incumbent, therefore, on the organized Jewish community everywhere to impress upon West German officials the need for the Bundestag to enact revocation legislation immediately. Only a fraction of Nazi war criminals have been brought to trial since the end of the Second World War. Every day new evidence is being unearthed regarding the complicity of Nazis in the murder of hundreds of thousands of innocent men, women, and children—not all of them Jewish. The implementation of the statutes law would grant legitimacy to murderers even though prima facie evidence of their guilt might not be available until the 1980s.

We look therefore to its consistent regard for justice in asking it to recall those statutes of limitation which would make a mockery of the sacrifice of so many millions.

Five young Israelis gather in Bat Yam to tell reporter about mood of country

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

TEL AVIV, Israel —

It's Friday night in Bat Yam, a crowded suburb of Tel Aviv, and five young Israelis in their 20s and 30s, educated and upwardly mobile, are gathered in the cottage living room of Aryeh H., a Sabra whose parents survived the concentration camps of Poland.

Friday night is a special time for most Israelis who are neither recluses nor misanthropes. They get together at each others' homes for conversation, munching sunflower seeds and nuts, sipping cool drinks to ward off the heat and reclining in relaxed poses.

Tonight, for the benefit of a Canadian visitor who is in Israel in an attempt to gauge the mood of the country, Aryeh and his wife, Ida, have invited a cross-section of their friends to their home.

They are a mixed lot, two men and three women, and they all live in the vicinity, a middle-class neighborhood populated mainly by what the Israelis commonly call "young couples." Both men have fought in two wars, and their women have worried about them. By Israeli standards, indeed even by Canadian ones, they are doing well.

Aryeh, a graduate engineer who is now a children's clothing manufacturer, is an Ashkenazic Jew. Ida, his red-haired Sephardic wife, was born in Bulgaria. She used to be a high-school teacher, but after bearing her first of three children, she left the classroom and opted for the kitchen. They are in their late 20s.

Ziv B., and his wife, Rachel, a high-school chemistry teacher, are as well off economically as their hosts. Ziv, a balding man in his mid-30s, is a sales manager for a large electronics firm and his work often takes him abroad. Rachel is dark and quite attractive. Ziv is intelligent and skeptical.

Ruth is an English teacher in a Bat Yam public school. She learned the language from her mother, an American. She is unmarried, a woman in her early 30s.

We converse in English and Hebrew, discussing a range of current topics high on the list of priorities in a nation on the brink of signing a peace treaty with its Egyptian neighbor.

What, I ask, are the prospects for peace in the area?

"There might be peace with Egypt, but not with the other Arabs," says Ruth. "And I feel Russia will push Syria into a war with us."

She says she is all in favor of trading occupied land for a real settlement, but the Arab terms calling for a full Israeli withdrawal are simply unacceptable to her.

"If the Arabs want peace with us, they'll have to consider our feelings, too," she says, explaining that Israel would endanger its security, indeed its existence, by agreeing to all the Arabs' demands.

Aryeh is hopeful but a little skeptical.

"If the political momentum continues unabated, there can be peace. But the Arabs are childish and in two speeches they can throw it all away."

Aryeh, who voted for the now-defunct Democratic Movement for Change in last year's national election, fears the Israeli government isn't strong enough to negotiate a lasting settlement. "We need a strong government for peace and we don't have one. Neither do we have an appealing leader."

Despite Anwar Sadat's pique with his fellow Arabs, Aryeh does not believe the Egyptian president will sign a separate agreement with Israel. Egypt, he argues, cannot ignore its inextricable link with the Arab world.

Ziv is optimistic and pessimistic.

He is wary about the concessions Israel has relinquished in the Sinai, but he thinks it is for the best. And besides, "do we have a choice?" He hopes the tension between Israel and Egypt will subside, yet he wonders whether Arabs and Jews can live in peace. "If the Arabs can't live among themselves, how can we live with them in peace?"

Moreover, he is convinced the Arabs are years away from accepting a Western, Jewish state in their midst. "The Arabs see us as 'whites' and as a foreign element. . . . We're different in terms of culture and aspirations."

He scoffs at Prime Minister Begin's pledge that there will not be a Palestinian state in the occupied areas. "There will be one, and the PLO will run it. How can we control the PLO when we can't even control our own political life?"

Rachel fears the future.

"I don't think the hatred among the Arabs will suddenly vanish. And in the Arab states, peace depends on one strong man—a Sadat—who can sway his population. What happens if he is killed?"

She pauses, her face intense. "I would give up all of the occupied territories for peace, even the Western Wall. But are the Arabs capable of making peace with us?" She is sure a Palestinian state would prove dangerous to Israel's existence. "They would try to attack us."

Ida is the most optimistic person in the room.

"I'm usually optimistic," she allows. "The situation as it exists today is ideal for a settlement. Egypt is really tired of war. The Egyptians want peace, and Israel should withdraw from all the areas if necessary."

The much-maligned settlements engage the attention of Ziv and Ruth.

"In the long run, they will help our diplomacy," he argues. "By handing them over to the Arabs, in return for an agreement, we will show them and the world how flexible we are."

Israel should sacrifice the outposts for peace, she says but only on condition that Jews be permitted to settle "anywhere in the occupied lands."

Compared to Egypt, Lebanon is a fairly secondary matter in Israel's body politic. However, the continual tension there worries Israelis like Ziv, Ruth, Rachel and Aryeh.

According to Aryeh, Israel should tread carefully in Lebanon. "No one is willing to fight for someone else, as the U.S. did in Vietnam," he remarks. "If the Maronites were at least united—and they are far from being so—we could better help them."

He is convinced that Syria covets Lebanon. "They want it and we can't stop them if the United States continues its present policy."

Ziv sympathizes with the Lebanese Christians, but the reality of the situation is such that Israel's options are limited. "How can we help them? We go in with our army and then what?" He says he opposed Israel's invasion of southern Lebanon last March. "It only postponed a solution of the problem."

Ruth and Rachel voice similar ideas.

"I feel for the Maronites, but we're not really in control of what's going on," Rachel says. "We should help them as best we can, but we can't fight for them," comments Ruth.

In their view, the most serious internal problem confronting Israel is what they describe as "the quality of life."

Inflation is a worry, of course, but it pales in comparison to "the quality of life."

Ziv defines it as the ability, or lack thereof, of the Israeli people to form a liveable, healthy society. As he sees it, modern Israel has failed in varying degrees to measure up to the standards set by the early Zionists. This, he contends, has contributed to less aliya than was envisaged by the founding fathers and a rising increase in yerida, or emigration.

"If Israel is to attract Jews from the Diaspora—or make its citizens happy and content with life here—there must be less crime, more order and obedience to the laws, and cleaner streets," he explains.

"Our problem all these years has been that the government has found it easier to deal with foreign affairs than domestic affairs," he continues. "It's easier, for example, to deal with Sadat than striking T.V. technicians or crime in the streets.

Says Ida: "Our streets are too dirty and there aren't enough parks and gardens in the cities. There are many beautiful hotels, but our schools are overcrowded and medical care is in a mess."

Rachel is just as emphatic. "The quality of life here starts with children picking flowers from my garden and ends with the poor driving habits of our people."

Few outsiders, she says, realize Israel's well-being may hang on the extent to which it can solve these pressing problems.

Letters to the Editor

Toronto book fair is disappointing

For months, I had been looking forward to going to the Toronto Book Fair. I was planning to spend $100 or maybe $200 on building up a good Jewish library as described in The CJN a month or so ago. The selection, organization and discount enticements of a typical book fair are something that I and many others just cannot resist.

I went. I saw. I was terribly disappointed, leaving with only a $1.25 paperback on Eastern Europe.

The prices were outrageous. Hardback novels were selling for $10, $20 and more. Picture—coffee table—books were going for $40 or more. Many of these same books were available at Zuchers and Negev for 20 - 30% o less, as their standard price. I asked an attendant why they were so expensive; she said part of the profits went to subsidize the speakers. When I reminded her that three dollars a seat was being charged—even if only 200 seats were sold for a lecture, the $600 would probably be enough to cover airfare and fee—she could make no reply.

I've been at book fairs in Israel and Australia. In every case, the books were offered at a discount in order to encourage buyers. That's the whole purpose of a book fair. I was involved in one myself: the 30 percent discount off list that we gave kept the publishers happy, got people to buy books, and even netted us, the organizers, a couple of dollars.

I don't want to delve into the less than happy organization of the books—running a book fair is a learning process for all involved—but I do want to add that there were not enough of those 'core' Jewish books that The CJN's article led me to expect. There were few commentaries, Bible criticisms, etc., and the few I did see were stashed way in the back.

But the important thing was the prices charged. The point of a book fair is to encourage people to buy books. Asking those kinds of prices drives potential book buyers out the door. It destroys the whole purpose of a book fair.

If we Jews are 'people of the book,' we should not try to take advantage of each other on the very staples of our culture.

Brenda Levin,
Toronto

Read carefully

I enjoyed reading the article "People of the Book go to the Fair," by J.B. Salsberg.

While it might be true, that the sacred books were valued "by countless millions," let us pause, and think a little.

Perhaps, not before about 100 years ago, few people, Jews and non-Jews, were able to read, and write. It is only a fact that the writings in the Bible were passed on by the few, who could read, to the many who were illiterate.

No doubt, much good has come from a knowledge of the Bible. There is a danger for people to restrict their reading, to religious writings.

A lot of truth also emanates from what is sometimes referred to as the secular.

In present day writing, good as well as bad, prevail.

It is very important for a reader to critically examine what he reads. Otherwise he (or she) will be brainwashed.

Gala concert

In a recent article (Friday, October 13), Rick Kardonne gave the Canada-Israel Cultural Foundation credit for bringing the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra to Canada three times within the past eight years (twice within the last two). We compliment the CICF for its initiative and involvement in making available many Israeli cultural events in Canada.

In reference to the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra's appearance in Canada in 1976, I state with much satisfaction and pride that Montreal Mizrachi Women were responsible for sponsoring a gala concert at Place des Arts. This event proved to be one of the most outstanding social, cultural and financial successes of the season.

Visitor's views

I am a visitor to your city from Denver and have been very taken with your Jewish community. Its cohesiveness, the network of Jewish educational facilities and the magnificence of the YMHA are only a few of the many things which impressed me. The problem of Jewish foster children in Christian homes has, however, caused me great concern. I hope your community will be able to remedy this very soon.

Jerusalem is important for its varied economy

By ARYEH GREENFIELD

JERUSALEM —

The Jerusalem of Jewish tradition never was merely an ethereal concept. Even in ancient times, history tells us, this sacred city was the focus of pilgrimage and the home of many craftsmen such as potters, glass blowers and tanners. Modern Jerusalem continues to be an important centre of religious and cultural endeavors inhabited by flesh-and-blood people also engaged in scores of widely varying professions, trades and businesses.

Its economic character is determined largely by the fact that it is the capital of the state of Israel, the home of central national institutions and the goal of hundreds of thousands of tourists annually. Approximately 45 percent of all gainfully employed work is public and community service—almost twice the proportion for all of Israel. Another 10 percent provide tourist services or work in commerce.

The manufacturing industries also play an important role despite a complete lack of natural resources except stone and human ingenuity. One out of every eight Jerusalemites works in a factory, and strenuous efforts are being made to continue the city's industrial development.

Most of the infrastructure for this continuing industrialization is provided by the Jerusalem Economic Corporation (JEC), a public corporation owned by the Israel Government, the Jerusalem Municipality and several other institutions. Active since 1949, the JEC prepares industrial zones and builds manufacturing premises to be rented or sold to individual firms. In its almost three decades of activity, the company has built more than 275,000 square meters (about three million square feet) of factory space in seven separate areas.

All in all, Jerusalem is home to 800 industrial enterprises employing more than 13,000 men and women. Some of these ventures are intended mainly to satisfy local demand, such as bakeries and cabinet-makers' shops. However, Jerusalem manufacturers aim increasingly at national and international market.

Interesting examples of such firms with broadening horizons are RIM, one of Israel's largest makers of wood furniture; Jerusalem Shoes, the biggest single maker of footwear in this country; and Keter, a renowned publishing house specializing in reference books and Judaica. All three hold dominant positions on the domestic scene and have much export success to their credit.

Mifrmal, a firm originally set up with the personal participation of investors from the United States, makes aluminum tubes and other extrusions, as well as copper and brass tubing. Redmond-Amcor, a member firm of Israel's major home appliance combine, produces fractional horse power motors. Israel Aircraft Industries have begun to set up one of their manufacturing divisions in the Atarot Industrial Zone, next door to the Jerusalem Airport.

Even the garment industry has several large plants established by foreign investors in Jerusalem. Frine Lingerie, for example, is part of a chain with factories in Italy and France, and Triumph International makes foundation garments all over the world. Like many others, both of these companies are primarily geared for the export market; only a small portion of their output is sold domestically.

Rivka Weingarten, who fled from Jewish Quarter of Jerusalem in 1948, Arab-Israeli war, has returned and opened a museum to display pre-1948 utensils generally found in a kitchen.

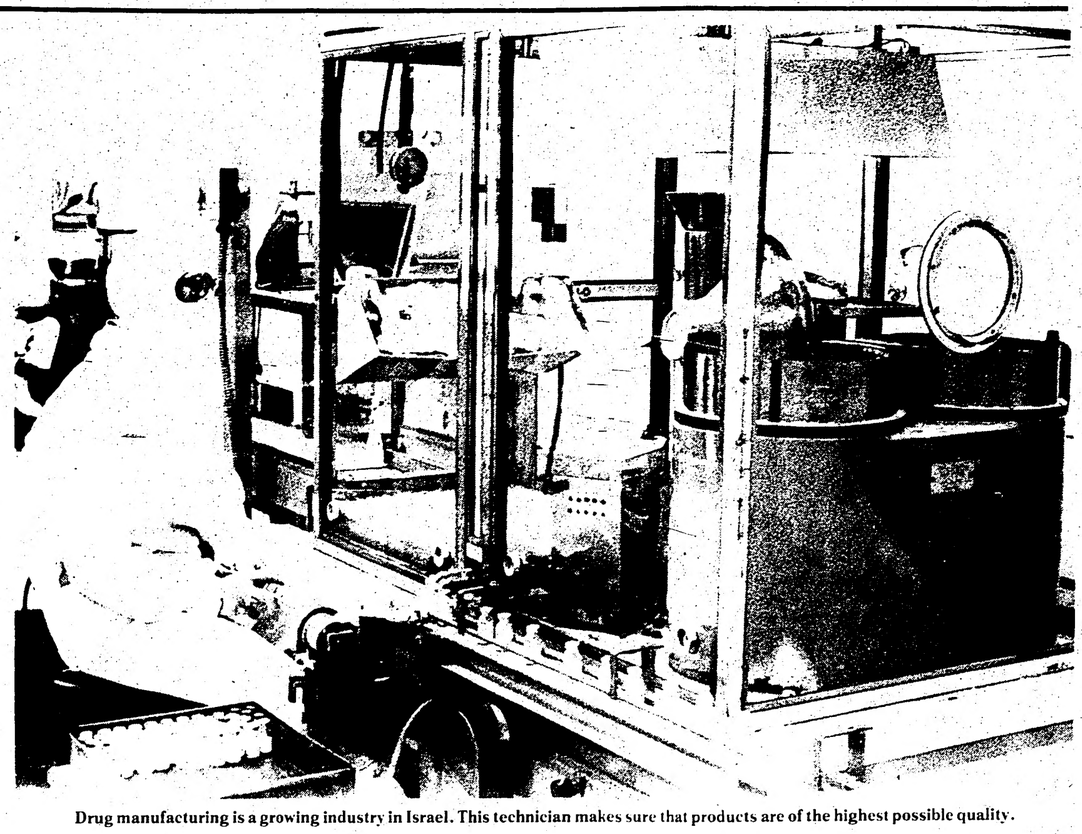
Jerusalem is also a world publishing centre. Ranging from small family enterprises through good-sized companies, literally dozens of independent publishers and private and institution-affiliated printers compete for an ever-growing market. By taking advantage of the translating talents of immigrants from a hundred nations, Jerusalem has become a centre for the translation of scientific and technical material. Highlighting this prestige is the biennial Jerusalem International Book Fair, which affords hundreds of publishers from nearly 50 countries the opportunity to exhibit 50,000 books.

Eminently suitable for Jerusalem conditions are high technology industries such as stress research and new product development. Best known among the firms already active in these fields are Ames-Yissum, a joint venture of U.S.-based Miles Laboratories and the Hebrew University; Teva Ltd., Israel's largest pharmaceuticals house; and RAFA Ltd., internationally known producers of highly specialized drugs and vaccines.

In order to serve the specific needs of science-based ventures, where access to specialized laboratories may be as important as an orderly raw material supply, a special Science Based Industries Campus has been built. This carefully planned industrial zone is the joint development of the Hebrew University and the Jerusalem Economic Corporation.

Jerusalem's future industrial growth is also assured by the city's educational institutions. Several of Israel's best secondary and post-secondary technical schools are located in this city, preparing the skilled technicians who will man the factories and laboratories still to be built. But challenges do remain: Jerusalem—not only to improve her tax base and income structure—must deftly encourage the growth of industry to ensure that her many young people do not seek employment elsewhere. Great emphasis will also have to be placed on maintaining the purity of Jerusalem's air and her spirituality.

Aryeh Greenfield is the editor of Israel Business, a review of business news and economic development, and of Innovation, a monthly report on industrial research and development in Israel.



Drug manufacturing is a growing industry in Israel. This technician makes sure that products are of the highest possible quality.

In Uncle Eliezer's opinion, we need a Jewish ombudsman

By J. B. SALSBERG

Do we need a Jewish ombudsman in Canada?

My good uncle Eliezer thinks that we do. And he assures me that all his loyal friends of the regular, Thursday night schvitz group share his opinion.

As for myself, I have an open mind on the subject.

But before we can deal intelligently with this question we need to be clear on what we're talking about.

What, for instance, is an ombudsman? Furthermore, what does my uncle mean when he asks for a Jewish ombudsman?

Many readers of this enlightening column may well have perfect answers to both of the above question. But even among the staunch loyalists of this column there may be some who would find it hard to describe an ombudsman. In fairness to all, a precise definition of terms seems advisable.

The first countries to establish the office of ombudsman—were those in Scandinavia. I believe that Sweden was the first to do it. Other democratic countries followed their example. In Canada, the province of Ontario has set up that institution, as have a number of other provinces and it looks as if Ottawa is about to do the same.

According to Webster's dictionary an ombudsman is: "a government official appointed to investigate complaints made by individuals against abuses or capricious acts of public officials."

To which I should add that an ombudsman needs to be a person of sterling character and record. The holder of that important office must be objective, fair, impartial and possess the courage to be forthright.

Now that we have some idea what an ombudsman is, or should be, we need to know what uncle Eliezer and his friends have in mind when they ask for a Jewish Ombudsman.

They made it clear to me that they are not suggesting that, say, the ombudsman of Ontario, or of Canada should be a Jew. What they want is a Jewish ombudsman, with all the necessary qualifications, who will be appointed by the highest body of Canadian Jewry—the Canadian Jewish Congress—who would be authorized and enabled to discharge the duties of an ombudsman within the confines of Jewish communal life in this country.

But, you may ask, as I did: "Is there a need for such an institution in our Canadian Jewish community?" Uncle Eliezer and his loyal lieutenants, Mendle and Sam, insist that there is an urgent need for such an office. The three spokesmen for the Thursday night regulars were at my place to discuss this subject. We drank gallons of tea, consumed four lemons in the process, argued back and forth for hours and this is the gist of their presentation:

— There are quite a few Jewish organizations and institutions that have outlived their usefulness and some are actually defunct. But in some cases considerable funds remain and only a few individuals have control of those funds. While there is no suggestion of dishonesty or desire for personal benefits, there does exist an ingrained resistance to the final distribution of such funds to worthwhile institutions or national fund-raising agencies that are in urgent need of those inactive funds.

— There are declining organizations that have title to large cemetaries that are far in excess of what such moribund organizations will ever need. But when flourishing organizations seek to buy portions of such excess ground, the last Mohicans of the once-prospering organizations either refuse to sell or ask prohibitive prices.

— Not all fund-raising bodies make public their annual financial statements. Nor do all such bodies make clear what their administrative costs are in relation to the funds raised.

— Who, at present, is authorized to investigate and to determine whether certain communally financed services are useful or necessary?

— What tribunal can a given organization appeal to if it feels mistreated or denied its due by central, fund-distributing agencies?

These, my dear readers, do not exhaust the long list of examples presented by my good uncle and his friend in support of their proposal for the establishment of a Jewish ombudsman's office. "We are not the kind of people who sit at home watching TV," uncle Eliezer emphasized. "We belong to various organizations," added Mendle, "we attend meetings and we meet and talk to all kinds of people on and off Bathurst Street and we hear their complaints and listen to their questions."

Well, my dear friends, this is surely a ticklish issue that my uncle raised, eh?

Some of their particularized instances, I decided, had better not be itemized here at this time for good and substantial reasons.

We parted with my assurance to the group that for the moment I have an open mind about the whole thing.

In the meantime, we agreed, my uncle and his friends, Mendle and Sam, will gauge the reactions to this column among their friends and acquaintances on Bathurst Street and its environs. They will report in due time. You will, of course, be the first ones to hear all about it.

Israel's new terminal building to aid east-west movement

By SYBIL ZIMMERMAN

JERUSALEM —

The Allenby Bridge, a much used, but little publicized link between Israel and Jordan, is a rickety-looking, wooden-planked structure.

In contrast, not far away from the shallow, green Jordan River which flows under it, is a new ultra-modern, airconditioned terminal which opened recently in a ceremony presided over by Israel's Defence Minister Ezer Weizman.

Cutting the ribbon for the new terminal, which will afford comfort and convenience for the thousands of people passing through the "open bridge" daily, Weizman said: "This new terminal building will not only improve the coming and going between East and West, but it will advance commerce, it will advance understanding, and I hope and pray it will bring peace."

Since June, 1967, Israel has had an "open bridges" policy whereby any Arab from any part of the Arab world with friends or relatives in Judea and Samaria in the West Bank or the Gaza Strip is free to spend from 30 to 90 days within these areas and Israel. Likewise, the "open bridges" concept applies to any resident of the areas who wishes to leave for study, travel or work in the Arab countries.

During the past ten years of the "open bridges" policy, five million persons have crossed the Allenby Bridge and the Adam Bridge to the north. Jordanian farmers who wish to market their agricultural or industrial produce in Judea and Samaria as well as products headed for Jordan have also flowed freely over these bridges. Last year alone, $3.5 million worth of industrial and agricultural produce were exported and $2.4 million worth were imported over the Allenby and Adam bridges. Amazingly, this commercial traffic was not interrupted during the 1973 war, while Israel was at war with most of the Arab world not including, however, the Kingdom of Jordan.

"This open bridge is an expression of the efforts of all logical people—of both nations—to enable the inhabitants on both sides of the river to lead normal lives," remarked Defence Minister Weizman. "The Israel Defence Forces which erected the terminal are a unique army—one which has given proof of its ability to erect both bridges of peace and bridges of war."

The 25-yard-long Allenby Bridge, connecting Israel and Jordan, is guarded by Jordanian soldiers sitting in a sandbagged hut on one side and Israeli soldiers in a wooden structure on the other. They often carry on friendly conversations, discussing in English the woes of army life and "the world situation." The Jordan River, which is destined for the Dead Sea several miles away, is a small, unimpressive border, embroidered with bulrushes growing on both sides.

Buses with visitors or trucks with produce cross the bridge year round from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. and proceed a few minutes along through a sandy, deserted area to the new terminal building. Luggage of passengers is taken by porters to the customs section. Passengers first have their documents checked by the police, then, in an airconditioned hall, claim their luggage from lavender-colored carts and continue for customs inspection. Passing through bright blue colors, they go outside to waiting buses or taxis—all taking between 30 minutes and one hour. In the height of the summer travel season, some 5,000 to 6,000 people pass through the facilities. Before the new terminal was built, processing took up to four hours.

Begin briefs Trudeau on key points at issue in peace talks

At the press conference neither leader mentioned Canada's opposition to the thickening of Israeli settlements on the West Bank, or its position on Jerusalem. However an official said the issue of the settlements was discussed in a sort of question-answer session in which Mr. Begin explained Israel's position and through questioning, the Canadian position was made clear.

Canada does not recognize Jerusalem as the capital of Israel and considers East Jerusalem "occupied territory" and a subject for peace settlement negotiations. The Trudeau government considers settlement in the occupied territories to contravene the Geneva Convention.

Begin said he did not ask for any financial aid from Canada, but urged that both sides work towards improving the imbalance in their trade. An official said that the joint Canada-Israel trade commission will meet shortly to see what can be done to increase Israel's exports to Canada.

Regarding the establishment of a UN peacekeeping force, Begin said it is up to the United Nations to decide the nature and composition of any force, and it is up to Canada to decide if it wishes to share in it. However, he said Israel would be pleased to see Canada help form the UN forces.

The peace treaty calls for UN troops at Sharm El Sheikh to protect free passage through the Straits of Tiran.

Just preceding Begin's arrival to Canada, Jamieson announced that the 850 Canadian troops now serving in the Sinai and the Golan Heights will stay at least until next July.

Trudeau said he explained Canada's new policy on the Arab boycott of Israel, soon to be introduced as legislation. The legislation, which would require public disclosure of any companies accepting contracts with Israeli boycott clauses in them, and would outlaw negative certificates of origin, has been widely accepted by Canadian Jewish leaders, he said.

The timing for the introduction of the legislation was not discussed, but an official later said the government hopes to introduce legislation within two weeks.

After the talks, Begin was the guest of Governor-General Jules Leger for lunch at Government House.

Later, as he arrived on Parliament Hill to watch the question period, he was met by a demonstration by about 200 of Ottawa's Arab community shouting "Down, down with terrorist Begin."

A spokesman said the Arabs were denouncing Begin for allegedly masterminding the massacre of Palestinians in the village of Deir Yassin 30 years ago.

Begin, present for only part of the daily question period, missed the attempt by former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker to make a motion endorsing Israel's claim to all Jerusalem.

Speaker James Jerome declined to put the question to get unanimous consent, when Diefenbaker asked the Commons to couple its welcome to Begin with the hope "that the city of Jerusalem on the basis of history and heritage shall, in its entirety, be part of Israel."

BEGIN'S HISTORIC CANADIAN VISIT

limousine flew the Israeli flag, and passersby on Bathurst and Eglinton waved as the cars rounded the corner, which was cordoned off by the police.

Earlier in the week, Begin spoke to 400 persons at Shaarei Shomayim Congregation, in a meeting that was opened to the press at the last moment. To buttress his contention that Israel has negotiated fairly with Egypt, Begin read a section of the Camp David pact which said: "In order to achieve peace the parties agreed to negotiate in good faith a peace treaty while attempting to encourage other parties to the peace treaty to negotiate a comprehensive peace."

On Friday, Toronto became a centre of international diplomacy as Begin held a press conference for about 100 journalists and photographers, and met Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan and Defence Minister Ezer Weizman at the Harbour Castle Hilton Hotel overlooking Lake Ontario.

Dayan and Weizman flew in from Washington to confer with Begin following news reports that talks between Israel and Egypt on a peace treaty had hit a dangerous snag.

At a press conference, Dayan told reporters that if the talks broke down Israel would consider Egypt responsible.

"If President Sadat wants to stall the talks, it is within his power. If he tries hard, he will achieve that," said Dayan, who appeared to be grim.

At his own press conference in the morning, Begin declined to characterize the impasse as a crisis. "You can use many words. I prefer to say we have problems. Problems have a reason and now we have to know what they are."

In reply to another question, the prime minister said he could envisage a second joint meeting with Anwar Sadat and Jimmy Carter if this proves necessary. And he cautioned that the attainment of an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty may take more time than is generally imagined.

Begin said the 1949 armistice talks had extended over a period of about seven months and conceivably the current negotiations might last as long.

He stressed that, after 30 years of Arab-Israeli enmity and warfare, a few months was not an unreasonable length of time in which to conclude a peace treaty. But he said he hoped it could be signed within the three-month deadline.

On the question of a Palestinian state in the occupied areas, Begin reemphasized his total opposition to such a solution. "A so-called Palestinian Arafat state would pose a mortal danger to Israel," he said, adding that it would become a Soviet base.

Excoriating the PLO, he compared it to Hitler's Germany. "Except for the Nazis, there has never been a more base organization." He scoffed at the notion that PLO members were freedom fighters, calling them "killers," and labelling PLO chairman Yasser Arafat as "an agent for Moscow."

Begin said Israel continues to aid beleaguered Christian forces in Lebanon. "Were it not for our help, the Christians of Lebanon would have been wiped out long ago."

He congratulated the Ontario government for passing anti-boycott legislation. He said it was "an absolute shame" that Canadian firms which do business with Israel are blackmailed.

Begin said he hoped Canada and Israel can achieve a balance of trade, and he said he believed Canadian-Israeli ties would be deepened in the future.

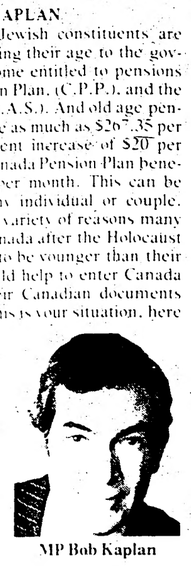
Advice to senior citizens to help in collecting pensions

By BOB KAPLAN

Many of my elderly Jewish constituents are getting into trouble proving their age to the government when they become entitled to pensions under the Canada Pension Plan, (C.P.P.), and the Old Age Security Plan (O.A.S.). And old age pension can mean for a couple as much as $267.35 per month including the recent increase of $20 per month. The maximum Canada Pension Plan benefit currently is $194.44 per month. This can be important income for any individual or couple. The problem is that for a variety of reasons many Jewish immigrants to Canada after the Holocaust represented themselves to be younger than their true age believing it would help to enter Canada and get a good job. Their Canadian documents understate their age. If this is your situation, here is some advice.



MP Bob Kaplan

You are entitled to the pension based on your real age, not on the age that you may have claimed to be in the past. If you really are 65 or if you are 60 with a spouse over 65, you meet the age qualification. A procedure is provided in law to settle your age and there are appeals available if you disagree with the decisions of government officials. You don't need a lawyer to help you but you are entitled to have one and, if you can't afford a lawyer, legal aid is available free of charge.

Mistakes, deliberate and accidental, in entry records from the 1940s are very common. My experience is that no penalty will attach to any past misrepresentation either of your age or of you name. If you want government statistics about you corrected, this can be done.

The earlier you correct your record the better. Don't wait until you reach retirement age. The sooner you do it, the more help you can get from elderly friends and relatives who know how old you are. Their memories will be a big help to you.

Get application forms for O.A.S. and C.P.P. at any post office. Fill the applications out and have them witnessed. I suggest, if age is a difficult issue, that you deliver your application in person. One federal government office is located at 4900 Yonge Street near Sheppard Avenue.

How to prove your age. In some cases evidence might be available from your home town. The federal government office will help you get records from any country. If national boundaries have changed you may have to try two countries. It is better to get a letter from a government saying they have no record of you (and explaining why not) than not to try at all. Also of help could be school records, insurance records, hospital or medical records, employment records, pension records, newspaper clippings, assessment or voter's lists, memberships, court records, naturalization, citizenship, immigration, passports. You are probably named with your age in a census of Canada and with your written approval these confidential records can be made available.

Evidence from individuals who know you should be in a declaration, made before a notary.

If you are unsuccessful in convincing the director on your first attempt, you should not give up. Both acts contain appeal procedures which permit you to appeal to other officials or the minister. You can begin your appeal at 4900 Yonge Street. If you go to that office, they will help prepare your appeal. On the appeals you can bring any new evidence that may come to you and you can bring a lawyer or friend to help you if you don't want to proceed alone.

In the last analysis, you have a right to go to court to a judge who will be prepared to consider any evidence you have to put forward and any explanations which help to prove your age. If the judge believes you, he will order the government to pay your pension.

Bob Kaplan represents York Centre in the House of Commons.

TORONTO —

Harry Simon, prominent labor leader, was unanimously elected chairman of the 1978-79 Histadrut campaign at the annual conference of the Israel Histadrut campaign of Toronto.

Ontario regional director of the Canadian Labor Congress from 1958 to 1974, Simon is at present a member of the Ontario Labor Relations Board, the Ontario Labor Management Arbitration Commission and national chairman of the Jewish Labor Committee of Canada.

In handing over the chairmanship to Simon, Dr. Sydney Wax, immediate past chairman, expressed his conviction that under the new leadership, the Histadrut campaign of Toronto will attain ever greater success.

Guest speaker Clifford Pilkey, president of the Ontario Federation of Labor, assured the conference that the Histadrut in Israel will always have the support of the Canadian labor movement, while Terry Meagher, secretary-treasurer of the OFL, a member of a recent Canadian trade-union delegation to Israel, told the audience about his impressions of Israel, the viewpoint of a non-Jewish trade unionist.

Other officers elected are: Benjamin Himel and Maurice Boyman, vice-chairmen; Harry Steiner, treasurer; Moishe Pizel, chairman canvassers' council; Sam Lipshitz, chairman, Israel Histadrut Foundation; and Victor Giblon, project chairman.

U.S. duplicity and Arab hostility overlooked in Camp David euphoria le euphoria wich followd the Cam· David agreements on t² framework for peace nd which surounds the resent negciations beteen Israel and Egypt, as severely criticized l Prof. Uri Ra'anan in a series of tiree lectres at Beth Izedec Sagogue recentl.

Dr. Ranan is professor of international politics at Fletcher School of Law and Diplmacy at Tufts University, Medford, Mass., and concurrently is affiliad with the Centre of ternational Studies at IT at Columbia and at ity College of New York.

He was critical of the silence in the media concerning many important facts which the community at large and the Jewish community in particular should know concerning the Sadat "peace initiative," the Egyptian President's pro-Nazi history, President Carter's duplicity during the negotiations and little-known provisions of the accords. Dr. Ra'anan expressed the belief that there will still be great difficulties and possible bloodshed before any real peace is achieved in the Middle East.

It is his belief that the Arab world, including Egypt, has not changed its basic view of Israel or the Jews and that treaties must therefore by looked upon with great misgivings, unless they are of a type which do not depend upon the "goodwill" of the contracting parties or the "goodwill" of other powers, such as the United States.

Stating that the proposed agreements depend very substantially upon the goodwill of the Egyptians and citing many historical breaches of former armistices and separation agreements, Dr. Ra'anan pointed out that Israel was giving up tangible concessions against intangible promises from the Egyptians. The Egyptians' promises were easily reversible while Israel's concessions were virtually irreversible, without going to war, he asserted.

Referring to the role of the United States in the negotiations, it was Dr. Ra'anan's view that both during the negotiations and subsequent to the Camp David accords, the United States has been imposing its will upon Israel, rather than permitting it to negotiate.

Referring to the communique which had been issued jointly by the USSR and the United States in 1977, Ra'anan commented that it was virtually a Russian document with some amendments made to it by the United States. It moved away completely from Resolutions 242 and 238 of the Security Council of the United Nations. He pointed out that it, and not those United Nations Security Council Resolutions, became the basis for the Camp David accords. Instead of referring to the solution of the refugee problem—without referring to Arab refugees or Jewish refugees, both of whom were intended in the original resolutions—the US USSR communique and the Camp David accords for the first time referred only to "legitimate Palestinian rights."

In the few hours prior to the announcement of the Camp David accords, Dr. Ra-anan pointed out that President Carter produced a document which he wanted Prime Minister Begin to sign. Among other things, it acknowledged that East Jerusalem was part of "occupied Arab territory."

Upon Begin's refusal, this view of the United States was kept alive in a letter which President Carter delivered to President Sadat, declaring that the attitude of the United States was consistent with the position stated by the United States ambassador to the United Nations on July 14, 1967 and July 1, 1969.

As innocent as that expression might seem on the surface, Dr. Ra'anan pointed out that the statements made on those dates by the U.S. ambassador were to the effect that East Jerusalem was indistinguishable from the occupied territory of the West Bank.

Consequently, it is still the United States' position that East Jerusalem must be given up as part of the West Bank. He referred to the existence in East Jerusalem in the office of the U.S. consul-general which has no contact whatsoever with the Government of Israel or with the legal municipal authority of Jerusalem and which has been interpretting the American position on East Jerusalem and the West Bank to West Bank Arabs, both before and since the Camp David accords.

Dr. Ra'anan pointed to the fact that the Camp David agreements provide that any treaty is to be endorsed and ratified by the five permanent members of the Security Council. This, he stated, gives the Soviet Union a veto. Such a position is contrary to the enunciated stand of the United States and is substantial appeasement in Dr. Ra'anan's view, to the Soviet Union.

Dr. Ra'anan is convinced that Begin is driven by a desire to bring peace to Israel almost at any cost. Secondly, however, he felt that Begin came to Camp David bereft of credibility. This credibility gap was caused by the fact that although Likud obtained such an overwhelming vote in the elections, it has no party newspaper or other means of communication with the populace to express its opinions or obtain support. Further, the media in Israel are substantially controlled by the Left; consequently, "public opinion" is interpreted by the media for their own purposes. Compounding such a situation, the "Peace Now" demonstrations upon Begin's departure to Camp David received a tremendous play in the press, while the counter demonstrations which were of equal size received no coverage.

THE KENSINGTON MARKET MOVES NORTH

By Sylvia Cohen

The first thing you notice when you walk into the North Kensington Market, (636 Sheppard Ave. W., near Bathurst) is that it has the same sights, smells and sounds of the more famous market to the south.

But the North Kensington Market has a lot of things which you just won't find to the south. Things like a sparkling clean atmosphere and the largest selection of cheese, smoked fish, herring and nuts in the Northend.

In fact there's smoked salmon, lox, white fish, sable, sprats and carp. And for the herring lovers there are eight different types to choose from. The ever popular schmaltz herring is joined in the large cooler by pickled herring, herring in sour cream, matjes and Holland herring. Right next to the herring you'll find the North Kensington Market's homemade blintzes. Blintzes which blintz eaters talk about throughout Toronto.

The whole idea for the market started about 10 months ago when Henry Ender, 27, and Norman Sukonic, 54, decided to combine their 32 years of experience in food to open their own place.

Henry is very proud of his store as he points out the stained glass windows, antique telephones and milk cans and wooden floors to the customers. He said, "people are looking after prices today and we're giving them low prices. People can afford to eat well again when they shop here."

The young store owner stresses that at the North Kensington Market the customer will find "low prices, top quality and top service." While Henry's saying that he's serving a happy customer from behind the cheese counter (there are more than 40 varieties of cheese available). Also there are two whole shelves devoted just to the cracker, sardine, tuna and salmon section. And a huge selection of fresh nuts and dried fruit.

The North Kensington Market is so busy that Norman estimates close to 700 customers pass through his doors on a typical Saturday morning. Henry said, "people come from all over the city to shop here." So to make things easier for them they've decided to open a second store right next to the Pickle Barrel Restaurant, Leslie Bakery, and Wycliffe Meats on Leslie.

"We'll have the same values and the same great products like Astro yogurt and Blue Bell cottage cheese there too." While Norman will mind the Sheppard store, Henry will move on to the Leslie branch.

UIA campaign

BELLEVILLE —

The opportunities of coming peace between Israel and Egypt, side by side with the growing economic and social needs of Israel, were focal points of the UIA campaign recently held in Belleville.

Addressing the brunch meeting at the Sons of Jacob Synagogue, Lt.-Col. Yona Gazit, newly arrived UIA emissary from Israel, described the unlimited economic opportunities which could be derived from a peace agreement with Egypt.

Arnold Osborne, this year's chairman, was presented with the 30th Anniversary Award from Jerusalem, by Ben Ocopnick, executive director of the UIA Ontario Region, for his dedicated work in this capacity for the 1977-'78 campaigns...

Anti-boycott legislation

By DAVID BIRKAN

TORONTO — Ontario's anti-boycott legislation, Bill 112, was formally signed into law last week by Lieutenant Governor Pauline McGibbon.

The Canada-Israel Committee issued the following statement, signed by Norman May, its national chairman; Phillip Givens, national president of the Canadian Zionist Federation; Rabbi Gunther Plaut, national president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, and Hy Lampert, president of B'nai B'rith district 22.

"The Canada-Israel Committee, representing the Canadian Zionist Federation, Canadian Jewish Congress, and B'nai B'rith, is delighted with the passage of Bill 112, an Act to Prohibit Discrimination in Business Relationships, and outstanding piece of innovative legislation.

"We wish to commend the government of Ontario and its premier, the Hon. William Davis, for their initiative in introducing this landmark measure, and all three parties in the legislature and their leaders for their unanimous support of it.

"Bill 112 will greatly contribute towards safeguarding the human rights of all Ontarians, protecting the people of this province from the discriminatory restrictive trade provisions of secondary and tertiary boycotts.

"This comprehensive legislation constitutes a decisive step in eliminating the intrusion into the Ontario marketplace of the invidious discriminatory practices of the Arab boycott. It is a proud day for Ontarians."

Along with Plaut and Givens, those present included Trade and Industry Minister Larry Grossman; Lou Ronson, president of the CIC's chamber of commerce and president-elect of BB's district 22; Rabbi Erwin Schild, chairman of the CIC's central region; Myer Bick, national director of the CIC; Howard Stanislawski, CIC associate national director; and Ron Atkey, former MP and John Eakins, MPP.

Attorney-General Roy McMurtry conducted the group to the signing.

Research at Technion

By DAVID BIRKAN

TORONTO

General Res Amos Horev, president of the Israeli Institute of Technology (Technion), said Israel would have to maintain her military strength and research programs into the near future at least, regardless of whatever may be resolved through the Camp David accords.

Horev gave three reasons

—the great increases in the Arab military shopping lists will soon see Israel virtually surrounded by hostile armouries unparalleled in size and sophistication.

—Israel's loss of the Sinai peninsula would represent the absence of a crucial buffer zone between itself and a potential enemy, a weakness which, Israel would have to compensate for in other ways.

—Israel's current dependence on U.S. technology is nearly a total one, a situation making Israel exceptionally vulnerable to a foreign power.

"Israel has developed a strong military research and development arm. This, together with our growing production capabilities, will allow us to design, develop, produce and maintain an increasing proportion of the weapons at our disposal," said Horev.

For several years now Israel has had its own jet fighter available to international markets the Kfir. But its use of an American engine has led to the U.S. imposing sales restrictions upon it, despite the interest shown in the Kfir by Latin American and other countries. The plane is significantly cheaper and easier to maintain than other airplanes of similar performance.

Israel's developing facilities have also allowed it to market boats, missiles and drone aircraft.

Currently, it is working on a new medium tank, the Merkabah.

"Technion has been heavily involved in these projects, directly and indirectly," said Horev. "Besides the actual research carried out at the school itself, Technion-trained engineers are working on others across the country. Over 70 percent of the engineers have been educated in our institution."

Way back in August, when most members of the community were still enjoying the summer sun, the UJA Major Gifts division, headed by Allan Offman, started planning the 1979 campaign at a breakfast meeting at the Inn on the Park. Meetings have been held every second Thursday (commencing at 8 a.m.) since then and turnouts have been exceptional.

Especially encouraging is the continuing presence of past UJA chairmen: Stephen Berger, Wilfred Posluns, Ralph Halbert and Tubby Cole. Another past chairman, Al Green, joined us a couple of times.

It's been the practice to have the past chairmen give us brief talks relating to their campaign experiences. And we have had as special guests David Ariel, the new Israel consul-general in Toronto, and Avraham Avi-hai, world chairman of Keren Hayesod.

The meetings are definitely NOT all talk. Things happen! Allan Offman makes sure of that.

First, the cards of the $25,000-and-over prospects were distributed, with completion targeted for September. Then came the $10,000 to $25,000 group, with a scheduled October completion. Now, the rest of the prospects in this division are being canvassed.

We hope to have at least the first $15 million of the campaign raised by Dec. 31. So far, prospects look very good for reaching this goal.

Three exciting events have boosted the Major Gifts division to date: the North American UJA Prime Minister's mission to Israel, in which several Toronto UJA leaders participated; the Toronto UJA Prime Minister's mission to Israel, in which 30 participated; and the dinner held last week honoring Prime Minister Begin during his visit to Toronto to officially open the campaign.

Under the firm and inspiring leadership of Allan Offman, the Major Gifts division is heading for a record-breaking campaign. I'll keep you posted on its progress.

As most of you are aware, a great many refugees from Russia have settled in Toronto with the assistance of JIAS, one of the UJA's beneficiary agencies. The Russians have integrated quickly into our community and now, their organization—New Canadians from the Soviet Union—is campaigning for the UJA.

Mike Lefel, chairman of the association, sent a letter to the 900 members listing the services supplied through UJA funding and urged them, as members of the Toronto Jewish community, to take part actively in the 1979 campaign. "This is your opportunity," he said, "to perform the mitzva of tzedakah—help for your fellow Jews who need help."

It's nice to know that those we helped not so long ago are now looking to help others.

* * * * *

Congratulations to the UJA public relations department which, for the second year in a row, has won the "best advertising" award in the annual public relations contest of the Council of Jewish Federations. Our winning entry comprised the series of hard-hitting display ads and the Tubby Cole column which promoted the 1978 campaign.

Maurice Lucow and Esther Mehr of our PR department did the research for the ads and the column. Vickers & Benson Ltd. Advertising prepared the ads (and is doing them again this year).

* * * * *

Great news from the Jewellers. At the first meeting held last week, chairman Harry Binder announced that $215,000 has already been pledged by this group—which is 65 percent of the total raised last year. Marvin Wenger is co-chairman of this powerhouse group and members of the campaign committee are Fred Metter, Joe Eisen, Aubrey Sugar and Mark Libman.

* * * * *

Dentists also work fast.

The Dental group, headed by Dr. Elie Wolfson, met recently to distribute cards and get the campaign under way. More than 600 cards are already in the hands of canvassers and many are already signed and back in the office—all with substantial increases. Dr. Wolfson pays tribute to his captains for a job well done in organizing the canvassers. The captains are: Drs. Barry Chapnick, Allen Feldman, Marv Kopel, Ron Landsberg, Mitch Levine, Marv Richie, Leo Weil and Bernie Yaphe.

As always, the dentists rely heavily on their fraternity, Alpha Omega, for campaign support and president Dr. Harvey Taube tells me the executive has already met to make plans for another big year.

* * * * *

Drs. Scarlat Albright and Stan Salsberg, co-chairmen of the Optometrists, have called a campaign meeting of their group for Sunday, Nov. 26 at Baycrest Centre (in the board room). Optometrists, opticians and lab personnel have been invited.

* * * * *

The Travel group hopes to beat the winter holiday rush this year by campaigning early, according to Dave Freudman and Bruce Cole, the co-chairmen. Cards were distributed at a meeting held last week.

DID YOU KNOW THAT . . . . . a UJA gift of $1,250 can provide an elderly immigrant to Israel with a year of old-age payments. The payments are made by the Jewish Agency to immigrants who, on their arrival in Israel, are too old to participate in the national social security program.

sparks from the torah

By RABBI MEIR GOTTESMAN

Parshat Vayaira

V'heenai shlosha anashim. . . . Behold three men stood by him. . . . (Abraham)

There's no such thing as being religious but not being kind—a good Jew is a nice Jew. One of the holiest mitzvas is visiting the sick.

Reb Aizel Slonimer once visited a scholar who was ill. The man's wife, however, refused to allow him to see her husband, insisting it was impossible, her husband was too sick.

As Reb Aizel rose to leave, the man heard him outside, and called out that the rabbi must visit. When the rabbi entered, he apologized for his wife's behavior, and asked him not to be insulted.

"Oh, I'm grateful to your wife," the rabbi answered, "because of her I understand a passage in Talmud that troubled me. The Talmud says King Hezekiah refused to visit the Prophet Isaiah, and vice versa, each one insisting the other visit him.

"What did the Almighty do? He caused Hezekiah to become ill, and the Prophet Isaiah came to be m'vaker choleh. But it always troubled me—why did the Almighty cause Hezekiah to become ill, why not Isaiah? Now I understand, though. If Isaiah became ill, and Hezekiah came to visit, Isaiah's wife would not have allowed him to enter. But since Hezekiah didn't have a wife, G-d knew Isaiah would be admitted right away. . . ." (Fun Unzer Alten Oitzer)

Some people have a house with six bedrooms, but it's too "small" for any guests. This writer knows some Jews who have half a dozen children in a small apartment, but when an "oreach" comes to Toronto, somehow there's always room for another soul.

We have to learn from our father Abraham. After his circumcision (at the age of 99, no less) G-d wanted to spare him from the bother of guests. What did He do? He made the sun incredibly hot, to discourage travelers. Abraham was so upset, that he sat at the entrance of his tent.

Rashi explains: "Abraham was looking for an ovair v'shave—those who pass back and forth."

"It's strange, though. Why was he looking especially for those who pass back and forth, why not just for any visitors?"

But it teaches. There are two types of "mshullachim," poor persons who come for a handout and help. Some are afraid of nothing. They will knock on your door and accost you on the street. They're used to their business.

But then there are the ovair v'shav. . . . Those people who lived all their life from their own resources, but somehow fell from their station. Now they must stretch out their hand. But it hurts . . . when they approach the home or office of a rich person, they walk back and forth 10 times before they have the courage to ask. Those were the ones whom Abraham was looking for. They were too shy to ask on their own. He grabbed them, fed them, all with a loving warmth that kept their dignity.

People who ask for money are also people. Mshullachim also have feelings. They also had a mother and father. They also have children and friends. Those who give thousands in charity, but heap abuse, insult and embarrassment at the very same time they help, have more of a sin than a mitzva.

* * * * *

Not only should one give, we should teach our children to be caring.

A guest came to the home of a great rabbi. "My son," he told his child, "let me hear you teach something about the laws of welcoming guests."

The son went, and laid out a clean, comfortable bed for the tired guest. "That is my Torah," the son answered.

Torah begins and ends with Lev—the heart. Shabbat Shalom.

Joseph Kerzner is inducted Fellow of Brandeis University

By DAVID BIRKAN

TORONTO —

Joseph Kerzner was inducted as a fellow of Brandeis University at his Bayview home last week, the first Toronto man so honored for his services to the Massachusetts-based liberal arts and sciences institution.

Dr. Marver H. Bernstein, president of Brandeis, presented Kerzner with a diploma. Assisting in the ceremonies were Edwin Hokin, vice-chairman of the board of trustees; Henry Foster, a trustee; Abraham Lieff, retired justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario; and Justice Sydney Robins.

Kerzner is a chartered accountant specializing in shopping centre development. He is sponsoring a student at Brandeis on a scholarship in his name.

He is dinner chairman of the Jewish National Fund's Negev Dinner, to be held Dec. 6. He is vice-chairman of Beth Tzedec's board of governors and Ontario chairman of the Canadian Shaare Zedek Foundation. He is also a director of Mount Sinai Hospital, Baycrest Centre, and the Jewish Theological Seminary.

In 1977, Kerzner was invested with the title of honorary governor of the Lubavitch Youth Organization.

Dr. Bernstein, in his induction address, said that a student interchange may be initiated in the future between Brandeis and York University. Brandeis was founded in 1946 as the first non-sectarian Jewish-sponsored liberal arts institution of higher learning in the United States.

Among its specialties are Jewish humanities, medical research, and the preparation of students for medical schools.

Humanist rabbi denies validity of traditions

By BEVERLEY STERN

TORONTO —

As soon as Judaism becomes static and stops responding to contemporary needs, it becomes nostalgia rather than effective Judaism, Rabbi Robert Barr of Beth Adam, Toronto's only Jewish Humanist Congregation told an audience recently.

Judaism is a dynamic historical process which must continually respond to forces of change as well as continuity, he emphasized.

Jewish Humanism affirms man's accountability and responsibility for his own actions. While not denying the existence of G-d, it rejects petitions to the supernatural and authoritarian ethics, the rabbi said.

The Humanist evolution in Judaism is the fifth major mutation or radical transformation in Judaism. It comes directly out of the scientific and secular forces which have totally altered older traditional ways whether people acknowledge this or not, the acting rabbi from Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati asserted.

Nazi hunter Beate Klarsfeld (left) shows her recently published book to Rabbi Jordan Pearlson prior to her speech at UJA Day, sponsored by women's division. Adrienne Offman, chairman of the day, looks on. Mrs. Klarsfeld is a German Gentile.

Dangers of ignoring rise of neo-Nazism is UJA Day message

TORONTO (STAFF) — The rise of neo-Nazism in Canada and Europe cannot be ignored by the world. This was the message given loud and clear last week at UJA Day, sponsored by the women's division of UJA with the co-operation of the Federation of Jewish Women's Organizations.

The day fell on the 40th anniversary of Crystal Night, the beginning of the Final Solution.

Featured speakers at UJA Day, held at Holy Blossom Temple, were Beate Klarsfeld and Lita Rose Betcherman. Moderator for the event was Rabbi Jordan Pearlson.

Klarsfeld, a German gentile who married a French Jew, has devoted most of her life, since the early 1960s, to making the world aware of neo-Nazi groups and in trying to bring former Nazi criminals to justice.

Before an estimated crowd of 500, Klarsfeld gave a moving speech that took her almost an hour to deliver.

The main goal of Klarsfeld and her husband is to bring the Nazis to justice through their Association for Judgment of Nazi Criminals. She said, the job of stamping out anti-Semitism "is far from completed. It must go on.

"Today the Jewish people have a state which protects them, but anti-Semitism is still a threat. This is the sole purpose of many of the Arab states. Many of the nations of the world find it easier to side with the majority of 100 million Arabs than with three million Jews.

"Israel has to keep on reminding the world what has happened. And the Germans must keep supporting Israel," she said.

Lita Rose Betcherman, the second guest speaker, is a member of the Ontario Human Rights Commission and the author of The Swastika and The Maple Leaf.

The gist of her speech was on neo-Nazism and how it is surviving in Canada in various small pockets. She told how it really flourished and acquired a strong grounding when Hitler assumed power. "Hitler's rise to power inspired a rise of Nazism in Canada."

Jewish bathers in Toronto were beaten by Swastika Club members, she said. "Many of the groups were led by former soldiers who made an appeal to Canadian patriotism, to king and country." These groups conducted their meetings with the Union Jack and swastika flying side-by-side.

Young Israeli

Keren Hayesod emissary comes to Toronto

TORONTO — Lt.-Col. Yona Gazit has taken up his duties as special emissary to Ontario of the Jerusalem head office of Keren Hayesod United Israel Appeal. The 32-year-old Israeli, who was born in Jerusalem where he lived through the siege of the War of Independence, will be based in Toronto.

His term of service, two or three years, will take him to all parts of the province. His fluency with the English language is expected to be of distinct value in bringing his message to the Jewish communities.

Col. Gazit is on leave of absence from the Israel Defence Forces and when his Canadian service expires, he will again be in uniform.

Prior to assuming this assignment, Gazit was director of the public relations office of the Israel Defence Forces. In that position he was the contact man between the Israeli Army and the Jewish organizations around the world, and he was in charge of hosting, escorting, and briefing official guests — congressmen, senators, MPs, etc.—on Israel security matters.

In the early 50s, the family moved to Kibbutz Kfar Gleackson and in 1954 they joined the father who was appointed shaliach in Montreal for Youth and Hechalutz. Back to Israel in 1956 for school and high school and in 1964 he joined the army.

From 1965 to 1971, including the Six Day War, Yona Gazit served in the military Intelligence, reaching the rank of captain at the age of 23. At the same time he succeeded in going through social studies in Tel-Aviv University specializing in problems of developing countries and labor studies.

After spending two years with the army, he left to serve as the spokesman of the Israeli Manufacturers' Association. In the Yom Kippur War he was with the reserves and immediately after the war volunteered back to service. He was appointed director of the guest department in the IDF PR office and in 1975 was appointed director of the office, a position he held until he was offered the shlichut in Canada.

STORY OF DEVELOPMENT TOWNS

book review

By BERNARD BASKIN

The Other Side of Israel
By Laible Hoffmitz

Nateev Printing & Publishing
$8.00

Approximately 600,000 Israelis live in 27 development towns that dot the landscape from the Upper Galilee to the Gulf of Aqaba, from Kiryat Shmona to Eilat. Some of them such as Beersheba, Ashdod, Dimona and Ashkelon are well known. Others with names like Shlomi, Yokneam, Netivot, and Yeruham are unfamiliar even to frequent visitors to the country. But famous or unsung, large or small, successful or struggling, these communities, in their diversity, constitute one of the most instructive and fascinating social and human laboratories on earth.

Polish-born Laible Hoffmitz, a freelance writer who has contributed to numerous periodicals, lived in both Canada and the United States before emigrating to Israel in 1962. He is intrigued with the dramatic, but little-known story of how the development towns came into being, with their obstinate social and economic problems, how they have willingly absorbed newcomers and gradually achieved self-sufficiency and well-being.

When immigration threatened to overwhelm the fledgling State in its early years the government realized the majority of the newcomers would have to be settled away from the three large urban centres: Tel Aviv, Haifa, and Jerusalem.

The "other Israel" began with the miserable Ma'aborat (transient camps) through which a multitude of disconcerted immigrants passed. This "was a real traumatic experience which left physical, emotional, and mental scars on many of the Ma'aborat residents." Out of these chaotic conditions and this non-selective immigration came the towns, often built on the foundations of the demolished hovels, tents and makeshift dwellings.

The survival of the new towns involved a paradox. Although the most ambitious, mobile, and fittest of the residents left—the men and women with initiative, money, or skills—those who remained persisted and managed to turn their helplessness and weakness into strength. In a sense it was the survival of the weakest.

The author devotes a chapter to each town, carefully describing its time of origin, its demographic makeup, the nature of its problems, its singular contributions and likely future.

One basic impression emerges—the other Israel is overwhelmingly Sephardic, largely North African, with all of the cultural deficiencies that flow from a backward, sometimes almost primitive, way of life. The gap between them and the Western immigrants is deep and wide. In recent years this unhappy disparity has narrowed, but still remains. On the positive side is the fact that there is no unemployment in the development towns, and no recent exodus from them. It is noteworthy that even in the two thirds of the towns that have no high schools, between 80 to 90 percent of the children receive a secondary education.

The author's account of each community is filled with local color, absorbing vignettes and courageous and inspiring stories, in addition to the factual information.

Yes, the development towns, properly understood and evaluated are the "greatest creation, the most fascinating story in the re-birth of the land of Israel." The book, attractively printed in Israel, enhanced with many photographs, may be obtained from the Jewish book stores.

'The Last of Mrs. Cheyney'

Poor reviews for play fail to dissuade Newman

theatre

By LYNN SLOTKIN

Stephen Newman — a man of many parts

Stephen D. Newman is a man of many parts.

First, a smile—dazzling and genuine; a voice deep and rich; and finally a charm, intelligence and sensitivity that result in an actor of considerable talent.

He is at the Royal Alexandra Theatre in The Last of Mrs. Cheyney, starring Deborah Kerr, until Nov. 25, where he plays the stuffy Lord Elton.

The reviews for the play were not good, to say the least, and they did have a momentary dampening effect on the spirit of the company. But Newman's attitude towards such incidents is quite refreshing in its positiveness: "sometimes maybe when you go down emotionally it's a healthy thing, because it makes you then come up higher than you would if you had just been lulled along with some more mixed reviews."

The interview took place in a prop room of the theatre and at this point in the conversation a prop man, unable to contain himself on the subject became quite expressive in his denunciation of all critics. Newman, however, was thoughtful and articulate: "I feel a consensus of critical evaluation is generally worthwhile. Most often critics know something is not right, when they say it's not right it most often isn't. Almost more often, they don't know why. When they say "the problem with this is the play' it isn't the play, it's the director; or they say 'this was badly directed' and it's the actors (fault). They know what works and doesn't work but they don't know why—and it's very few critics that I have read that really know the functionality, I guess, of what happens in the event."

Why would he want to go into a profession with so much unemployment? He answered with a smile, "I guess because it averages out a little less unemployment for me. It's a business that, if you're willing to change your sphere from time to time . . . if you're willing to go from Broadway to Off-Broadway in New York, if you're willing to go from New York to touring companies, or regional companies, or film work, or television work or commercials, or in my case, if you're willing to work as a musician (he is also a double-bassist) . . . you really can work almost all the time with any reasonable luck."

His credits bear him out. He has worked on Broadway in such plays as Dirty Linen, Habeas Corpus and Rex; Off-Broadway in Polly, where he won an Obie Award, and The Beggar's Opera where he won the Best Actor Award in the Variety Critics Poll; in the film Network and on T.V. in The Guiding Light to name a few.

Newman was born in Seattle, Washington and comes from an artistic family—his mother is a painter, his father is a jazz musician and his brother is also an actor.

He graduated from Stanford University with a Master of Fine Arts degree. Next came work in such repertory companies as the Old Globe Theatre (in 1965) the Stanford Repertory Co. and the California Shakespeare Festival.

When the opportunity to act did not readily present itself he created his own company. He and his wife, actress Ruth Hunt, and Sheldon Feldner created Second Stage, and presented a season of plays. He finally wrapped up Second Stage because "I made a decision to learn more. I decided I had a certain set of experiences and a certain bag of tricks and I felt I've always wanted to learn from other actors—when I was in school I would always try to play smaller parts with better people, than leading roles in student drama society. . . . My goal has been to work with the best actors . . . because when you play with major leaguers, you're going to play better ball."

The learning is paying off; Stephen D. Newman is quite a player himself.

Veteran actress Marcia Diamond now plays role of former prime minister of Israel in 'Golda'

theatre

By JENIVA BERGER

You've seen her face on countless T.V. commercials. She's the lady who doesn't have Uniroyal tires during a blizzard and needs a push, the strident shopper who can't get over the fresh flavor of Tang, and the customer who gets left out in the cold because she hasn't got Chargex.

She's the lady of a 100 faces: Marcia Diamond, an actress who will be shortly adding a new face to her portrait gallery — Golda Meir. She plays the former prime minister of Israel in William Gibson's drama, Golda, a play which has a production history almost as colorful as its content. It opens at the Leah Posluns Theatre on November 18th as the season premiere for Arts Theatre Production under Reva Tward's direction.

Undoubtedly the biggest challenge of Diamond's career, she is understandably nervous yet exhilerated by the demands of the role. Well known as a Toronto television and radio actress, she has forgone doing a lot of stage work through her married life because she didn't want to leave her husband, importer Henry Cohen, alone a lot of nights. "For Golda," she admits frankly, "I'd leave my husband every night. It's the most challenging thing an actress could be asked to do."

Born in Vancouver, Marcia Diamond attended the University of Washington in 1943 on an acting scholarship. One had to do everything. She did, chalking up a lot of experience in her two years there before she enrolled at the prestigious Northwestern University's theatre department. At NU, she performed with schoolmates Cloris Leachman — they're still good friends — Paul Lynde, and character actress Charlotte Rae. "She's the one who does the oven cleaner commercial on TV," she interjects. "The one with her head in the oven!"

At the time, NU produced two radio shows in nearby Chicago and Diamond liked the medium. "In those days," she says, "to be a stage actress, you really had to be beautiful. I decided radio was the answer." In 1947, she won the Best Actress radio award and came back to Toronto armed with audition 'dises' as they were then called. She smiles. "Nobody did that in those days in Canada."

It didn't take long for the new actress to get her foot in the door, even though it was the era of the golden days of Canadian radio and those annointed to its calling were part of a tight little clique.

She performed with the stars of the airwaves — John Drainie, Terry Tweed, Budd Knapp — names that had been magic to her when she was growing up; acted in Henry Kaplan's stage production of Another Part of the Forest which won the DDF Festival and awards for its up and coming young leads, Kate Reid and William Hutt, and did the first Canadian play produced on the Royal Alex's stage, Morley Callaghan's To Tell The Truth.

Marcia Diamond — she'll play Golda Meir

"I did a lot of work and always intended to leave shortly and go to New York," she says. "But I got married and never did get there."

Her radio career blossomed, however, and to fill the need for occasional stage work, she appeared in productions like The Hamlet of Stepney Green, an early Leon Major success, and Once Upon a Tailor with Baruch Lumet (Sidney's father), at the newest little spot in town, the Colonnade Theatre.

Then there was a long hiatus. "The kids were growing up. Television was here, but I was still a little frightened. You had to be pretty, and I was rebuffed a few times."

It sounds like a line from Funny Girl, but Diamond has more often been compared to Carol Burnett than Streisand. "Anyway," she says, "I kept myself 'greased up' by doing a lot of work for Hadassah's Caravan, presenting everything from readings of Bialik's poetry to The Deputy.

Eventually the reckoning came: the kids were grown up, and, in fact, urged her to get back into the show business fold and practice her craft. The easiest entry at first was through her old medium, radio. But television was challenging and lucrative. Today she feels that commercials are a little "art" unto themselves.

Preparing to do Golda has been a major part in tackling the role. She's read two books about Meir's life, consumed "a whole lot about the Yom Kippur war" and absorbed Moishe Dayan's autobiography.

"But when it's all said and done," she sighs, "They're only lines on paper. It's your own voice and body that counts." She emphasizes that she will not be imitating Golda's mannerisms, voice, and physical endowments, the way Anne Bancroft did in the Broadway show. "I'll find her essence and rhythm, but anything beyond that is all wrong for my interpretation."

The play which takes the form of memory sequences during the 1973 Yom Kippur war will have, in Tward's production, little multi-media as compared to the Broadway version. "It goest back to the original conception," says Diamond, "where it was written stylistically. After all, Golda travels from the age of 17 to 75 within a moment. You just can't play that realistically." She feels that the "main thing in Golda's life is that she's a woman and responsible for sending out young men to die. The play is about that dilemma — Golda calls it her 'dybbuk'."

Five o'clock and Marcia Diamond is rushing back home to make dinner for a 7:30 rehearsal call. All the running, worrying, and reading has been worth it. The tall striking woman is a pro, and an actor is always in search of that gold mine of a part. "How many plays have been written for a woman where she never leaves the stage?" she asks.

There are two ways to buy beautiful jewellery: The EASY way, and the SMART way. The "easy" way is to walk into a big name jewellery store, and get something beautiful, but really pay for it. The SMART way is to call on me. (That's easy, isn't it?) Better still, I can make it EASY on your wallet. Yes . . . the same 10Kt., 14Kt. & 18Kt. gold pendants, chains, rings, etc., will be yours at TREMENDOUS SAVINGS. I can also save you a lot of money on diamond rings, too. Most people who get a great deal on jewellery have "a friend in the business." NOW YOU DO TOO . . . ME!

Beautiful records come out of Israeli Sephardic cultural revival now

music

By RICK KARDONNE

The Sephardic cultural revival is the major cultural news evolving in Israel today. Thanks to the joint efforts of some of the most outstanding singers, instrumentalists and conductor-arrangers in the world, the rich Sephardic liturgy and folk tradition is now being recorded on albums which are now available in Jewish record shops. These are albums I recommend most highly.

The central musical axis around which all this activity revolves is conductor Shimon Cohen, who is a leading light-classical orchestrator. Cohen, who studied with leading arrangers in New York and elsewhere, specializes in the dying art of arranging for strings, but excels in woodwinds and brass as well (in addition to being a very fine pianist).

Cohen's arrangements have perfectly succeeded in conveying the Sephardic liturgy as being an elegantly mature, spirited, diversified yet uniquely identifiable musical form. And he is ideally complemented by some of Israel's (and the world's, for that matter) top vocalists, Yehoram Gaon and Rivka Raz, and instrumentalists-choirs such as the Renanim Choir, the Israel Philharmonic String Quartet, the Israel Philharmonic Brass Quintet, the Israeli Woodwing Quartet, six mandolins, two mandolas, guitar. All have combined to produce, so far, two truly outstanding albums. Yehoram Gaon's Shabbat Songs in the Sephardic Tradition and Rivka Raz's Song of the Sephardi.

Shimon Cohen

All the songs on the Gaon album were from the multi-volume Antoligia de Liturgia Judeo-Espanola, compiled by the late Yitzhak Levy; considered to be the authoritative collection of Ladino-Sephardic liturgy.

The songs are all melodically beautiful, possessing a refined grace with full-blooded religious expression. But what makes them particularly memorable is the breadth and diversity of Cohen's orchestrations. Some of the selections are only with intricate brass counterpoint; others are only with strings, and still others are only with oboes and flutes. Due to this great variety of disciplined arrangements, each song sounds individually distinct. But for a strong melody line, I would choose Dvar Mishelo (as sung in Jerusalem and Turkey), Eyn Ke'elokeynu (as sung in Jerusalem) and Hamavdil (as sung in Jerusalem).

The versatile, attractive and gifted Rivka Raz, who starred in the Israeli versions of many Broadway shows, has released an equally memorable album entitled Song of the Sephardi, which, in contrast to Gaon's liturgical album, consists entirely of Ladino romances, also orchestrated and conducted by Cohen. It is the soundtrack of a feature-length documentary musical film by the same title, recounting the history of the Spanish Jews from the time of the Golden Age in Moorish Spain through the Inquisition and Expulsion of 1492 and their subsequent dispersion to Istanbul, Salonica (now Thessaloniki) and Amsterdam. Produced by Los Angeles-based David Raphael, and made with the participation of the Sephardi communities of Seattle, perhaps the most traditional in the United States, and Jerusalem, this movie will be released soon.

Travel industry gears for peace

By BARUCH SAVILLE

TEL AVIV — With the prospects of a peace treaty being signed soon between Israel and Egypt, the Israeli and Egyptian travel industry is going full speed ahead preparing the ground for what well could be an unprecedented travel boom to the entire area.

The close proximity of the two countries and the wealth of tourist attractions in both of them, would well provide the best ever tour package ever offered.

Already selling in the United States are two destination packages of either two or three weeks, divided between the two countries.

Although it appears at this stage that Israel will possibly have to return Sharm El Sheikh and other Red Sea tourist spots, there is every indication the existing Israeli properties in these places would continue to flourish even if they came under Egyptian rule.

Hindering widespread development of travel to Egypt is the lack of adequate accommodation in that country. Presently, all suitable hotel rooms in the main cities are filled year-round and even the addition of two new international hotels will not influence the drastic room shortage that would be experienced when the peace treaty is signed and travel to Egypt is open to all.

Meanwhile, the Israeli Egged and Dan bus co-operatives, between them offering more than 2,000 tourist coaches, complete with air conditioning and refrigeration, will commence operating on the run from Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, to Cairo within three weeks of the opening of the road linking the two countries. The fare by coach for the journey, to take about eight hours, will cost not more than $8-$10 (single) each way.

"If there is no adequate room accommodation for a two night stay, we'll co-operate with our Egyptian colleagues and put up tented cities to cope with the mass exodus in reverse" says and Egged spokesman.

El Al too, plans to get into the picture as speedily as possible and it is reported that landing rights would be requested at Cairo, Alexandria and Luxor, or Aswan.

Following reports in Israel that C.P. Hotels might be considering pulling out of Israel, recently appointed president of the Canadian hotel chain, Gordon Cardy, said in Jerusalem on a recent visit that the closure of CP Hotel's Israel office did not mean that the company had decided on this step due to any Arab boycott. (CP Hotels have been invited to take over 3 hotels in Saudi Arabia.)

While all the travel sector in the area are busy working out plans for combined tours of Israel and Egypt, C.P. Hotels Jerusalem Plaza manager, Simon Cooper said that he had recently visited Cairo to establish links with the Air France Meridien Hotel there.

Cardy revealed that the CP Hotel chain has also been examining the possibility of taking over management of a hotel in Cairo, but due to the lack of such a suitable hotel, it would possibly construct its own hotel there. Stressing that CP Hotels was remaining active in Israel, Cardy added that his company was still interested in acquiring management properties, not only in Tel Aviv, but also in other Israeli towns and especially interested in Eilat and the Dead Sea area.

Due to the reported heavy traffic presently at Toronto, where El Al wished to land, in addition to Montreal, Mr. Ehud Shilo said that possibly an interim agreement could be reached if El Al was granted rights to pick up passengers in Montreal, to onward destinations such as Mexico, etc. However, he added, all attempts by his office to set up aviation talks to discuss the subject have been rejected by the Canadian aviation authorities until mid-1980. It is reliably reported in Tel Aviv that many Canadians who wished to visit Israel on a low-budget, would take the opportunity of cheap flights from Canada to Europe, and onwards by charters to Israel, now permissable for one and all regardless of country of origin or the original flight.

Vacationers can take advantage of Miami Beach's three public golf courses.

A vacation funland in the heart of Florida

CYPRESS GARDENS — In 1931 it was just another plot of swampland along the banks of one of the larger lakes that abound in central Florida's highlands. Today it is Cypress Gardens, an attraction seen and visited by millions.

Located halfway between Tampa and Orlando, 30 miles from Walt Disney World, five miles southeast of Winter Haven, the Gardens has accumulated many descriptive phrases since opening to the public. Sports Illustrated dubbed it as "the one American amusement everyone should see" and another editor said it is "America's tropical wonderland."

Now admirers of plants and flowers who visit Cypress Gardens each year have even more to see. A new area, "Gardens of the World," in its fourth year is made up of 12 themed settings denoting beauty spots from various parts of the world. The new section is the largest botanical expansion since the attraction was created.

Cypress Gardens is open every day of the year. The public may stroll through between the hours of 8 in the morning and 6. Models in ante-bellum dresses can be found at various locations, eager to smile for photographers.

Almost as famous as the actual Gardens is the water ski review. Since 1946, it has been presented four times daily. The graceful acts of the Aquamaids and daredevil action of the Champions have led to Cypress Gardens also being known as the water ski capital of the world.

Dining and fast-food facilities are available and several gift shops are located in the main entrance building. Visitors should plan a stay of three to four hours at the gardens.

Camp David agreement called 'costly accord'

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

TORONTO —

The Camp David agreement calling for an Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai and Gaza Strip is a "dreadful precedent" that could lead to further territorial withdrawals by Israel, a noted Gentile Zionist told a Jewish Book Week lecture here last week.

Frank Gervasi, an American writer and journalist who has written extensively on the Middle East, said the Israeli government "will need much moral support from the Diaspora to resist American pressure for yielding more territory."

The author of The Case for Israel, To Whom Palestine? and Thunder Over The Mediterranean, described the Camp David accord as "a costly peace" because it compels Israel to give up Sinai, a useful buffer zone, and the settlements it has built there.

Though he did not elaborate, the 70-year-old American of Italian Roman Catholic origin said Israel's agreement to evacuate the Sinai — a "terrible pain" — could bring future repercussions.

Gervasi, who referred to Zionism as "my call" following the "dreadful arithmetic of the Holocaust," warned the sparse audience not "to hold its breath" about the prospects of general peace in the region.

He predicted there would be an Israeli-Egyptian peace treaty because Cairo needs it desperately. "But peace with the other Arabs is a long way down the road," and he added that the Arab states that have rejected the Camp David pact may seek to destroy Israel.

Despite his general optimism regarding an Israeli-Egyptian reconciliation, Gervasi warned that "the gravest danger to Israel may come now." As he put it, "Sadat is a mortal man. What after Sadat?" He said Sadat may be unable to deliver what peace implies, an economic boom.

Gervasi, whose speech was somewhat disjointed and theatrical, sounded like a zealous Zionist when he declared: "No one will ever force Israel to give up Jerusalem. Never!" and "the West Bank rightfully belongs to Israel!"

Currently in the midst of writing a biography on Menachem Begin, due to be published early next year, Gervasi called the Israeli prime minister a great man. "Begin has changed the course of history — he could have said 'no' to Sadat" when the Egyptian president offered to go to Jerusalem last autumn.

He said Israel was not only a bastion of democracy, but "a light unto the nations" and a source of Western civilization. By contrast, Islam, which has not made its peace with Jewish nationalism, is a religion of violence.

Gervasi, who at one time worked for the International News Service and Colliers magazine, disclosed that Arab interests had bought out the publishing firm that has printed his books and had then destroyed the plates.

He also said his staunchly pro-Israel views had undermined his popularity as a speaker on U.S. university campuses, and in recent years he has received fewer speaking invitations.

Singles' panel urges synagogues for increasing accommodation

By VIVIEN SHARON

TORONTO —

The synagogue should play a vital role in the organization of structured programs for singles, was the consensus of an open-forum panel discussion on the single syndrome, held last week at the Beth Sholom Synagogue.

Stan Smithers, one of the evening's panelists, and a widower for the past 10 years, said that singles must not think of themselves as an oddity — a fifth wheel in the community.

Smithers urged singles to participate in synagogue programs which, he felt, provided the best setting to mingle. "Safety and integrity somehow are stamped on shul singles functions — almost to the point of having a kosher seal of approval," he said.

Bill Stern, moderator for the evening and the director of regions for the Canadian Society for the Weizmann Institute of Science, commented that the emergence of single parents has become a growing reality that must be accepted by the majority culture as a viable alternative lifestyle.

He went on to say that the main concern of single parents is focussed on the challenge of raising a child in a Jewish environment without the traditional family unit.

Reiterating that "one is a whole number," Stern emphasized that the Jewish family can exist with only one parent and can completely honor the Jewish teachings, traditions and Mitzvot (laws).

Addressing a crowd of some 70 persons averaging around their mid-fifties (of which only a handful were men), Stern, himself, a divorced father of two with child custody said: "Singles have much to offer toward the educational, cultural, and social growth of synagogue to accept, wholeheartedly, the Jewish single parent family, considering the stringent economic situation of some and the time limitation of others. "Singlehood is often a temporary status which later culminates in remarriage," Stern added, "but singles, in the interim, want to be accepted for what they are."

Bertha Bockner, a divorcee for 14 years, told the audience that singlehood — either through divorce or widowhood — is a very lonely and trying time for a woman. "Her life is in limbo, accompanied by an easing of sexual taboos."

According to Ms. Bockner, the newly divorced woman or widow must ask herself "Who am I now that I am alone," finding herself displaced by her married friends and having attended as part of a couple for many years, she added.

She commented further on synagogue life by saying "Beth Sholom is one example of a synagogue that doesn't even allow a divorced woman to maintain her shul membership, whereas the divorced husband can."

Ricky Hartman, another panelist and widow for three years, asserted that widowhood has been the most stressful period in her life. "It is a time when you need the warmth and understanding of family and friends — a shoulder to cry on." Fortunately, a job and a busy homelife helped her overcome the issues.

The final speaker, Myra White, a 30-year-old unmarried single, is a single by choice. Miss White, who is a layperson on a special targets committee on singles for the Toronto Jewish Congress, said that she is a woman with her own identity and needs, and does not require marriage at the moment to feel complete. She added that family pressures among unmarried singles to marry are great, and tend to create unnecessary resentment and alienation.

The evening culminated with a heated open-forum discussion.

Diaspora Jews desperately needed

By JEFF BIEN

TORONTO — Israel desperately needs Jews from the Diaspora or it faces very real chances of not making it, according to Hillel Halkin, author of Letters to an American Jewish Friend.

Speaking to a small group of students and professors at York University, he warned that significant immigration is necessary if Israel is going to remain a Jewish state in light of a growing Arab population within the country.

He maintains that the Israeli is living in a community of faith which holds that it alone is the natural place for the Jew. "The problem for the Jew, as a modern man," he says, "is to somehow find secular forms which reflect his Jewishness. Such forms only exist in Israel."

Halkin's, speaking engagement coincided with York's "Israel Opportunities Week" and was part of a three-week tour of the United States and Canada.

Originally from New York, he spent a brief period teaching English at Columbia University and has been living with his family in Israel since 1970.

Letters to an American Jewish Friend is Halkin's first published work. It is a Zionist polemic in which he argues that any Jew who has a commitment to Jewishness belongs in Israel. An excerpt from the book reads as follows:

"A Diaspora Jew and an Israeli can talk to each other as ordinary human beings about anything they wish, but if they are to talk to each other meaningfully as Jews, there is only one relevant question with which such a conversation can begin: why don't you really come home?"

The author says he wanted to speak as directly to people as possible and therefore the book operates on a dialogue between himself and a fictitious Jewish friend from America.

"The questions are personal ones and the format enables me to develop the argument. There are, of course, two sides and mine ultimately wins out."

Halkin said that many people have written to him expressing the feeling that the letters in the book were directed specifically at them.

Elaborating on the plight of the secular Jew, he said that Jews are a people in the process of making a transition from the religious to the secular and are attempting to do it in the course of several decades. "In the Diaspora we are already not a religious people, but we think of ourselves as being so."

According to Halkin, the religious crisis in Judaism is really a reflection of a more general crisis.

"The Jew in modern times has found himself in a world where people no longer see things through religious eyes. He is faced with the problem of asserting his Judaism in religious forms while his self has ceased to be religious."

The author pointed out that Jewish life in the Diaspora is in the process of dwindling and argued that to be Jewish is to have a cultural identity.

"A people without a culture will soon cease to be a people—like a fish without water. Israel is the building of a culture that is Jewish and modern."

Much foreign investment

NEW YORK — Of 30 North American companies active in establishing manufacturing facilities in Israel during 1978, 12 have already started setting up manufacturing plants and an additional 18 companies have reached a final decision this year to invest in Israel. This was announced here by Uriel Lynn, North American director of the Israel Investment Authority.

In terms of increases in the number of projects and their range, 1978 promises to be the best year for North American investment in Israel, Lynn said. "This reflects a major surge of interest. The headquarters of these companies are spread across the country; five of them are based on the West Coast and a significant number are in the mid-west and southern states. This is a breakaway from the tradition of northeast based companies making off-shore investments. The companies who move to Israel are primarily mid-sized, hungry for growth and interested in international markets and technology."

Officials of the Israel Investment Authority attribute this dramatic upturn to several factors. As Lynn explained, "The liberalization of the Israeli economy last year and the free market principles by which the present government operates is a prime factor in attracting North American business." All restrictions on the exchange of foreign currency were abolished, allowing the investors to take money out of Israel in the form of dividends or capital gains whenever they wish.

Also directly responsible is the new legislation for the encouragement of capital investment and industry, passed on July 30, 1978. This legislation reduced corporate taxes, simplified the investment process and incorporated a special section which safeguards the investor from devaluation of the local currency.

In addition, the American business community is becoming more aware of the vast marketing potential ensuing from establishing a manufacturing facility in Israel: duty-free access to the Common Market; duty-free access to the U.S. of 2,700 product categories; reduced tariffs while exporting to other key Western countries like Japan, Canada, Australia; and convenient proximity to Iran, Africa, the Orient and to all major Mediterranean countries.

Yet another attraction for U.S. companies is the high caliber of skilled labor, the excellent research and development facilities and the special financial package provided by the Government.

Adath Israel Congregation marking its 75th anniversary with a Sabbath celebration

By BARB SILVERMAN

TORONTO —

This week marks the 75th anniversary of the founding of the Adath Israel Congregation in Toronto. It was back in 1901 that a group of Romanian immigrants began discussions on where to establish a synagogue that would meet the needs of their people.

To serve those needs the congregation at first called themselves the First Hebrew Roumanian Congregation Adath Israel, and later just Adath Israel, began conducting services in an already established synagogue called Bond Street.

And, in 1903, after saving nickels and dimes, the group finally had enough money to rent a place of their own, a room over a Turkish bath on Centre Avenue.

Membership increased steadily between 1903 and 1911, and construction on the synagogue's first building owned solely by them, began on Centre Avenue, when two small cottages were bought and torn down.

The original Adath Israel Synagogue was Orthodox, while the one now in operation is Conservative.

Because the success of the synagogue was enduring, the congregation began construction on a new site in 1942.

After many alterations and donations, the building on Southbourne Avenue, which is now the official home of the Adath Israel Congregation, had its official opening. By 1954, there were 180 families on the synagogue's membership list.

The synagogue's spiritual leader for the past 31 years, Rabbi Erwin Schild, says Adath Israel was the only downtown synagogue strong enough to move out of that area without amalgamating with a second synagogue. "We were able to establish ourselves on our own," he says.

The congregation has never regressed, only progressed, since its beginnings. Membership lists have grown to well over 1,100 families in 1978, and people have become actively involved in all aspects of synagogue life and Jewish awareness.

The synagogue holds classes daily, has an evening school, and is involved with the UJA, Israel Bonds, and many other worthy causes.

Rabbi Schild encourages interaction between synagogue members and the executives and says he hopes in future years the synagogue will become a more meaningful place for both young and old alike.

"Our hope is to remain in the leadership of synagogues in Toronto," he says.

Adath Israel will honor their 75th anniversary with a special Shabbat celebration on Nov. 18.

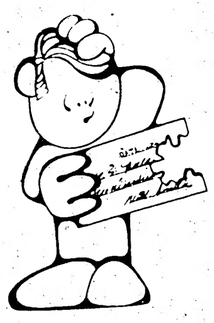
COULD YOU AFFORD IT?



Most Canadian residents are protected by various Provincial Government Health Insurance Plans and have no idea just how expensive Hospital-Medical care really is. But when you travel outside Canada you're exposed to additional hazards and the cost of medical treatment particularly, in some U.S.A. centres can be much higher than payments made by your Provincial Government Health Plan. In fact, even a minor injury or brief illness can cost you a considerable amount of money.

Why take the risk! We can protect you on a short term or annual basis.
